“It was a close thing.” Recovery Girl solemnly looked at the bandages and sling around Gang Orca’s right arm and shoulder, “The surgery was a success, so you should make a full recovery and have full use of your arm and shoulder again, but don’t push yourself too hard. Rest here for a little while and I’ll do another round of healing to speed things up for you.”

“Thank you.” Gang Orca sat down on another cot, which creaked under his great weight, “It would be appreciated.”

Recovery Girl nodded before her gaze landed on him and Miruko, “Thank you for helping out with the other injuries.”

“It’s no trouble.” Best Jeanist said, his eyes falling on Gang Orca, “I’m just glad our friend is okay.”

“Taking that hit from a High-End was no joke!” Miruko said, “What were you thinking!?”

“There were no more beasts to cover for us, and that hit was aimed to kill you, Miruko.” Gang Orca bowed his head, “And I could not let that Nomu take another one of my friends away from me.”

“Aw, geez.” Miruko scratched the back of her head with her good arm, “I owe you sushi or something.”

Gang orca chuckled despite the obvious pain he was in.

Hawks ducked his head inside, "Tsukauchi said the Doctor is on his way to Tartarus. The police have a handle on things from here." He looked at Gang Orca with a slight wince, "We can all go home as long as we get the green light from the boss lady."

Recovery Girl tapped her cane on the floor, chuckling, "The rest of you are free to go home, but Gang Orca should stay for another healing session."

"Good." Miruko stretched her good arm over her head, "I'm wiped!"

"Where are Spinner and Mr. Compress?" Best Jeanist asked, "I haven't seen them since we got to the surface."

"Nezu's with them, along with the other teachers." Hawks said, nodding, "They'll be going back to U.A. soon, according to what Tsukauchi told me."

"Welp." Miruko turned on her heel and walked towards the exit, "It was fun fighting with everyone! Let's do this again soon!!"

Gang Orca and Best Jeanist shivered.

"Let's not." Gang Orca muttered, but Miruko was already gone.

"What can be worse than the High-End Nomu?" Best Jeanist asked, "Or All For One at Kamino?"

"....I hope we never find out." Gang Orca said, unknowingly jinxing themselves against the Shadowy adversaries lurking in their near future.

"The Convertizer has long worn off by now." Satanael said as Ectoplasm led them back into the teacher's dorm, "Play it cool, and maybe he'll notice nothing is amiss. We've had plenty of time thanks to Gentle Criminal's subtle warning."

"This is Hound Dog we're talking about." Cu Chulainn said, "Dogs aren't easily tricked by scent."

"One dog knows another." Alice said with a smirk.

"Why you little-"

Vasuki cut Cu Chulainn off with a sharp hiss, "I'll erase his memory before an accusation is made."

"No." Ren said, "Not until we know for sure. We'll keep our composure no matter what."

"Spoken like a true Leader." Satanael warmly said.

Ectoplasm held open the front door for them, and nothing in the hero's body language spoke of suspicion or anger. Ren smiled as he walked through first, Morgana and Lady Stubbs following by his ankles.

La Brava was in an active conversation with Thirteen in the common area, waving her hands around excitedly as Thirteen nodded along. Nobody else was in here... aside from Hound Dog, who shot to his feet.

Ren blinked as Hound Dog came to a stop in front of him, nose twitching and eyes narrowed.

"Can I help you?" Ren asked as he put his hands on his hips, keeping his posture relaxed.

Ectoplasm stood beside Ren, "Hound Dog, what on earth-"

Hound Dog put his hand up, inching closer to take in more scents around Ren and down around the cats, his brow falling in confusion. Vasuki crept closer to the edge of Ren's psyche, mind-bending magic rippling under sickly purple scales. After several moments in tense silence, Hound Dog pulled back, scratching his thick mane. He turned away as if in embarrassment.

“Maybe I was overreacting over nothing.” Hound Dog ran a hand down his face, “These festivals always make me tired.”

“Are you okay?” Morgana asked in genuine sympathy.

“Yes, I’m fine. Excuse me, I need to go apologize to Gentle Criminal.” Hound Dog turned away and headed towards the kitchen, and a gnarled knot of tension released in Ren’s chest.

“I told you were we worrying over nothing.” Ren said.

Vasuki hissed, before disappearing deeper into the mindscape like a serpent creeping under the water.

“What was that all about?” La Brava asked.

“No idea, honestly.” Ectoplasm shook his head and sighed, “But whatever was bothering him seems to have resolved itself.”

“Well, aside from that, I got a message from Nezu.” Thirteen said.

Ectoplasm tensed, “What kind of message?”

“Everyone’s coming back, safe and sound. They’ll be here in an hour or so.”

“‘Safe and sound’?” Morgana asked as his eyes grew wide, “What the heck is that supposed to mean? Were they in danger this whole time!?”

“Why didn’t they tell us?” La Brava said, her hands bunching into fists.

“Nezu said he and Mr. Compress would explain everything to you once they returned.” Thirteen said, their tone softening, “The teachers all knew what they were going to do today, and I apologize for keeping it from you.”

“I...” Ren huffed, “Well, they’ll be back in an hour, right? Enough time for a shower, at least. I smell like dust and ozone.”

He beelined straight for his room, Morgana trailing behind him while Lady Stubbs went to comfort La Brava. They sighed in relief once they were secluded in Ren’s bathroom, with Ren clutching a clean set of clothes to his chest.

“What in the world were Mr. Compress and the others doing?” Ren muttered.

“We’ll find out soon. At least the heroes don’t suspect anything.” Morgana said from his spot on the counter, “We still have a chance to turn this around.”

“I hope so.”

“I don’t sense Kaito or Eri in the dorm.” Morgana kept his eyes on Ren as the shower was turned on and left to heat up, “Knowing him, he’s already working on something that’ll get us out of this.”

“If that’s true, then we need to back him up however we can.” Ren opened the door for Morgana, “I’ll do some brainstorming in the meantime, just in case.”

“Mercurius and I will too.”

Ren nodded and closed the door when Morgana left.

Mr. Compress and Spinner sat on opposite couches in Nezu’s office, expressions down turned as they waited for Aizawa to fetch the rest of their crew. They were a bit roughed up from the fight, with minor damage to their clothing, Spinner more so than his companion, with more than a few of his scales cracked in places that weren’t hidden by his costume.

Nezu took a quiet sip of tea and contemplated from the comfort of an armchair at the end of the table.

Joker was telling the truth on just how vastly superior arms and armor from his Personas are. Spinner took a direct blow from one of the High-Ends and managed to walk away with nothing more than bruises and broken scales, while a similar blow against Gang Orca, without such armor, got his arm and shoulder shattered to bits. It was only thanks to Recovery Girl's swift healing that Gang Orca walked away with his arm intact at all.

There was a knock on the door before it opened.

Aizawa walked in with Amamiya, Mona, Lady Stubbs, La Brava, and Gentle Criminal.

Mona gasped when he saw the state of his comrades, "What the heck happened to you two!?"

Amamiya and Gentle Criminal rushed over to them. Lady Stubbs clambered over Spinner and licked his nose, her motorboat purrs rumbling in her throat.

La Brava locked a heated glare on Nezu and Aizawa.

"We're fine, really!" Spinner beamed as he grabbed Lady Stubbs and held her up, "Our mission was a total success!!"

"Mission?" Amamiya looked between Mr. Compress and Spinner, "What kind of trouble did you get yourselves into?"

"Trouble, eh?" Mr. Compress chuckled as Amamiya sat at his side, "Coming from the star troublemaker himself, that comes off as awfully humorous."

Mona cackled while Amamiya turned a shade of red.

Amamiya cleared his throat, "Do you two need to be healed?"

“Nah,” Spinner placed Lady Stubbs in his lap and waved his hand, “This is small time stuff! You should have seen Gang Orca and Miruko, they-”

“Spinner .” Mr. Compress warned.

“You don’t need to worry about them.” Aizawa said as he leaned against couch Amamiya and Mr. Compress used, “They walked away with relatively minor injuries.”

“Tell us what’s going on.” La Brava crossed her arms, unmoved from her spot by the door, “Now .”

For someone of her tiny stature, she certainly gave off the aura of a frightening goddess whenever she was angry. Nezu himself did very much the same. Tiny but mighty. Nezu idly wondered if any of Amamiya’s Personas felt that way about her, too.

“I’d like to break the news, since this was all set in motion because of me.” Mr. Compress sighed and faced Amamiya, “In short, I knew where All For One’s doctor had been hiding for quite some time, and presented everything to Nezu so that we could get a team together and take him down for good.”

Amamiya went as rigid as stone. The golden flecks in his eyes lit up like the last rays of a sunset.

“You WHAT!?” Mona screeched, “Why the heck didn’t you tell us sooner!?”

“I had the same reaction.” Spinner said, his smile falling as he stared at Amamiya in concern, “He had good reasons not to share it until now! I promise!”

Gentle Criminal and La Brava exchanged worried expressions before they landed on Amamiya, his eyes still swimming in molten gold. The boy seemed frozen to the core.

“Part of it was because we weren’t in the right head space or health to take him down,” Mr. Compress said gently, placing a hand on Amamiya’s shoulder, “The other is that I didn’t want you to face him yourself, Ren. Not after what he put you through.”

Spinner scowled, “That asshole is lucky he didn’t come face to face with me, otherwise I would’ve beaten his face in.”

“It was Hawks, Snipe, and I that captured him.” Aizawa said, “He is currently being transported to Tartarus, where he’ll be thoroughly interrogated by Tsukauchi for every crime he committed.”

“We gathered as many allies as we could for this fight.” Nezu said as he studied Amamiya, who remained tense and silent as his gaze met Nezu’s, “All of those in your hero group, along with Nighteye and the Wild Wild Pussycats. Pixie Bob’s quirk was integral to winning the fight. Imagine the irony of being beaten by a quirk that your former master stole once.”

“So... everyone is okay?” Mona asked softly.

“Yep!” Spinner’s grin returned, although much softer, “Recovery Girl was there, so no long hospital stays for anyone!”

Nezu nodded, “And the remaining High-End Nomu have all been taken care of. As we speak, the lab is being dismantled and mountains of evidence uncovered. Enough that the Doctor will never see the light of day again.”

“His victims will finally get justice.” Aizawa said as his expression hardened, “All of those people he tormented, all of the unwilling victims who were turned into Nomu... they can all rest easy knowing that he’s finally been put away.”

Amamiya flinched. Mona looked at him in concern as Amamiya’s hands threaded through the not-cat’s fur.

“... Are you alright, Ren?” Gentle Criminal asked softly, “You haven’t spoken a single word about this.”

“I...” Amamiya cleared his throat as a small smile appeared on his lips, “I’m proud of you two, actually.”

Mr. Compress and Spinner straightened their spines, with Spinner’s eyes going wide.

Amamiya continued, “You gathered allies to beat a monster; not only getting justice for his victims like Aizawa said, but also preventing anyone else from going through that torture, too. You took him down without help from Mona or I. You’ve proven that you can handle yourselves against anything that comes up in the future.” His eyes glittered gold again, and his smile grew, “Satanael and I both agree that you’ll all be just fine after... well, when the time comes.”

Aizawa’s brow furrowed in confusion and worry.

Spinner shot to his feet, Lady Stubbs jumping onto his shoulder, “BUDDY!!!”

Tears poured out of Spinner’s eyes as he rounded the table and wrapped his arms around Amamiya.

“H-hey, be careful!” Mona yowled as he was shunted onto Mr. Compress’ lap.

The boy grunted as Spinner lifted him up, still crying, “I’LL ALWAYS BE PROUD TO HAVE HAD YOU AS MY LEADER FOR THE REST OF MY DAYS!!!”

“I’ll toast to that.” Gentle Criminal said softly, with La Brava nodding.

“Here, here.” Mr. Compress stated, his voice shaky.

Amamiya chuckled, though it came out watery as he patted Spinner on the back, “Thank you for this. It means a lot.”

Spinner backed away and wiped away his tears with the back of his hands. Lady Stubbs rubbed against his face in support.

Thoroughly confused, Aizawa opened his mouth, but they were interrupted by another knock on the door.

“Come in!” Nezu said, warmed by the Thieves’ interactions.

The door opened again, and this time an Ectoplasm clone walked in with Eri and Kaito. The polaroid camera hung around Eri’s neck, and Kaito held a large stack of photos in his hand.

Eri immediately saw Amamiya and Spinner’s expressions and bolted over to them, brow furrowed, “Are you okay?” She asked as she tugged on their sleeves, “Who got hurt?”

“N-Nobody, Eri-chan!” Spinner said as he crouched down to her level, “These are happy tears, I promise!!”

“Oh... okay.” Eri kissed him on the nose, “If you say so.”

Spinner locked a happy shriek in his throat and frantically nodded.

“To what do I owe the pleasure?” Nezu asked, grinning.

Kaito sat down on the other side of Mr. Compress, “Eri wanted to show you her pictures. Isn’t that right, Eri?”

“Yes!” She took off the camera and set it on the coffee table, small increments of surprise flashing through everyone in the room. This was the first real excitement she had shown ever, “Uncle Kaito says I take really good pictures!”

“It’s true.” Kaito said with a smile. He fanned out the photos on the table for everyone to see, “She has a real eye for photography.”

Nezu and the others leaned forward. Fiery trees locked in the bright colors of fall, beautiful fountains with leaves floating serenely in them, streams of sunlight filtering through the bare branches of the aspen grove Nezu favored in the forest he planted around the school. And all at quite pleasing angles that other amateur photographers wouldn't think of.

"My, my!" Nezu said, "You really do have a wonderful gift, Eri!"

"Really?" Her eyes lit up. She searched through the pile and held one up, "This one is my favorite."

It was a photo of the teachers' private gardens, containing both the fiery red maple and the golden ginkgo tree.

"It's beautiful." Mona said in awe, "Oh! We should put that one in our scrapbook!"

"Wonderful idea!" Mr. Compress reached into his pocket for a marble and tossed it on the table.

With a snap, a massive scrapbook appeared. He opened it to reveal many of the pictures they had taken over the past few weeks, mostly of individual members of their vigilante group, or all of them together in some form or another. Eri was in most of them, staring at the lens. Though there were none with her smile yet, her hidden joy could be seen through her eyes.

"May I?" Mr. Compress held out his hand like a knight would to a princess. Eri nodded and handed the photo to him, which he stuck into the first open pocket near the middle.

"What's that scrapbook for?" The Ectoplasm clone said as he and Aizawa stared at it.

"For treasured memories." Gentle Criminal said, his expression softening.

"Indeed!" Mr. Compress held up a finger, "This is just a rough draft version. I want to make copies of all of these photos for everyone in our group to have one."

“What a wonderful idea!” Nezu stated, “Just let me know when its ready, and I’ll help in that endeavor.”

“Much appreciated.” Mr. Compress replied.

“But if we are to take more pictures-” Kaito grabbed the polaroid camera and opened the bottom to take out the film, “Then we’ll need more.”

Kaito handed it to Nezu as he placed the camera next to him on the couch.

“I see.” Nezu grinned as he stuck the empty film in his pocket, “I know just where to order more! I can have them as early as tomorrow morning.”

“Thank you.” Kaito said, “It means a lot to us.”

“Ooh! Look at this one!!” Spinner shouted as he plucked another beautiful photo from the pile on the table.

They marveled at all of the pictures for several minutes more. Photos were passed around and Eri soaked in all of their praise with silent grace. Nezu made a mental note to add some photography lessons and to buy a heaping stockpile of film for it. Perhaps he could get her more modern cameras and lenses when she was a little older and more experienced.

“Not to interrupt,” Aizawa said after he looked at a text from his phone, “But Midnight is wondering when we’ll come back for dinner. She’s kindly asking for Amamiya to make more curry.”

“She’s addicted, isn’t she?” La Brava asked with a smug smirk.

“That’s one way to put it.” Aizawa grumbled.

“Ah, I suppose it is the time. Shall we take this photo session to the dorms then?” Nezu asked. “I’m sure the other teachers would love to see this, too!”

“We would have more room,” Kaito looked at Amamiya, “And you have more photos hanging up in your room, don’t you? We could add them to the scrapbook.”

“... Yeah.”

An odd look passed between Kaito and Amamiya.

“Right then!” Mr. Compress shot to his feet, “Let’s get going. I’m absolutely famished .”

“Me too!” Spinner rushed to clean up the spare photos and pushed them into Kaito’s hands, “Let’s go!!”

“Spinner-” Mona tried, but Spinner bolted out of the room first with Lady Stubbs.

“Well then...” Gentle Criminal chuckled, “He must really be starving if he’s in such a rush.”

Mona rolled his eyes, “We better go after him to make sure he doesn’t get himself into trouble.”

Mr. Compress trapped the scrapbook in a marble before he left, too, the others following after a moment.

They were down the hall when Kaito suddenly stopped and looked at Eri, “Did you forget something?”

Eri blinked, then looked down at herself, “The camera!”

Kaito snorted, then looked at Nezu, “Can we go get it quick?”

“Go ahead, the door is still unlocked.” Nezu said.

Kaito nodded, and held hands with Eri as they went back.

Amamiya and Mona watched them with strange expressions again.

“The rest of you go ahead.” Aizawa crossed his arms, hiding a scowl within his capture weapon, “I want a quick word with Nezu and Amamiya.”

Gentle Criminal and La Brava exchanged glances.

The Ectoplasm clone nodded, “We’ll meet you at the dorm.”

Mona sighed as he hopped down from Amamiya’s shoulder and onto Gentle Criminal’s, “Don’t be late! You know Spinner will complain nonstop until the food is done.”

“Wouldn’t dream of it.” Amamiya said with a smirk.

Aizawa waited until they were a fair distance down the hall, before turning his scrutinizing eyes towards Nezu and Amamiya.

“What the hell happened back there.”

Amamiya blinked, “What?”

“You two, and the rest of the vigilantes, are obviously hiding something.” Aizawa crossed his arms, “Talking about building memories. Saying that you’re proud of them and that they will be fine as if you won’t always be here, Amamiya. You cut yourself off, but I knew where you were going with it. So, what are you not telling me?”

Nezu flicked his tail as he and Amamiya exchanged a long glance.

“I...” Amamiya’s eye went to the floor as he scratched the back of his neck.

Nezu sighed, “It’s a long story, Aizawa.”

“We have time.”

Amamiya flinched.

Nezu shook his head, "You'll just have to wait until after the Cultural Festival concludes. I promise that you and all of the other heroes will get Amamiya's full story then."

Aizawa's eyebrows shot up into his hairline, he set his jaw to argue more, but he knew Nezu wouldn't budge, "Fine . I'll wait until then, but you better have a good explanation for all of your weird behavior."

"I do." Amamiya's smile tightened, "But believe me, it's a hard pill to swallow."

Nezu chuckled, "I for one, cannot wait to hear it!"

That didn't settle Aizawa, but the man said nothing more.

They heard footsteps, and looked to see Kaito and Eri return. Eri hugged the camera to her chest as if it was her most valued possession.

"Why are you all standing around?' Kaito asked when they rejoined the group.

"No reason." Amamiya was the first to start walking, "Is there a certain type of curry you were hungry for, Kaito?"

"I was hoping for something sweet and salty." Kaito said, "Is there any room for that in curry?"

Amamiya laughed, his expression brightening, "I'll see what I can do, pal."

"Can I help make the curry again?" Eri asked.

"Of course! There's a new recipe I wanted to try that-"

Nezu smiled as he and Aizawa listened to them talk about curry all the way to the dorms.

“Kaito, you’re a damn lifesaver!” Spinner said from within their only safe meeting place: the Challenge room.

They sat around the middle of the room, passing around midnight snacks and drinks like there was no tomorrow.

“No kidding.” Joker scrubbed his eyes with the heels of his hands, “I thought we were sunk. And you made sure to close the pop-up and log out of the computer? That’s how Sae got wind of us messing with her laptop back home.”

“I did. My quirk gives me photographic memory, so it was impossible for me to forget.” Kaito smirked, “Nezu will never know anything happened while he was away.”

“But how did you sneak it out?” Gentle Criminal asked as he passed some cookies to Spinner.

“Hid it in Eri’s camera. With the film out, there was enough room for it. I told her it was like hiding the treasure in the camera like Arsene Lupin did in that one chapter of Gentleman Burglar .” Kaito frowned, “I feel bad for dragging her into it like this.”

“We didn’t have a choice.” Morgana’s ears flattened and he sighed, “But at least this mission was a success. It could’ve been so much worse.”

“How are you feeling about everything, Ren?” Spinner asked, “I know we kinda went behind your back with the Doctor and all...”

“I meant what I said about being proud of you.” Joker said with confidence, “But I also feel relieved, honestly. I thought we wouldn’t be able to get him after we came to U.A. It’s been at the back of my mind since I faced Gigantomachia.”

Morgana curled his tail around himself and nodded, “I agree. I’ll feel much better going home knowing that there’s one less terrible monster in this world.”

“Giving you peace of mind is the least I could do after everything you did for me, Ren. We killed two birds with one stone because we all worked together to accomplish something amazing.” Mr. Compress said, then he turned towards La Brava, “How about it, La Brava? Think you can make a suitable virus from that treasure trove of knowledge?”

La Brava looked up from her laptop, “It’ll take a while to go through all of this, but you can leave it to me! I already have the basic template from the virus I used during the Sports Festival, only this one will be much more powerful when its finished.”

“Good.” Mr. Compress relaxed with a long sigh, “Now we can put our full focus towards the Cultural Festival and whatever lies beyond.”

“Well, there is one thing I want you to do, Compress.” Joker said with a sudden sense of seriousness.

Mr. Compress froze, “And that is?”

“I want you to take off your mask when we’re at the dorms.”

Mr. Compress sputtered, “You want me to- Why should I do that?”

“You and Spinner earned a hard-won victory with a majority of the teachers. No matter your opinion about them, that forges a bond you simply can’t ignore.” Joker said as he and Mr. Compress continued to stare at each other, “The teachers won’t, at least. If you want to put up an illusion of trust, then you’ll need to lower your guard around them.”

“He has a point, you know.” Morgana said.

“Yep! Plus, wearing your mask 24/7 can’t be good for you!” Spinner stated before he stuffed a whole cookie in his mouth.

“Have you even cleaned your mask since we got here?” La Brava asked, wrinkling her nose.

“I...” Mr. Compress held his masked face in his hands, “Fine. I’ll do it, but I won’t be happy about it!”

~~ 8 Days Until the Festival ~~

The next morning was business as usual.

Ren was helping Thirteen and Lunch Rush with breakfast as the other teachers nursed from the largest pot of coffee he’s ever made. Eri was munching away on a plate of fruit and toast next to Kaito and the others, with Morgana chatting happily away.

Except for Mr. Compress, who was the only one absent.

Another ten minutes passed before he walked in. Everyone turned to stare at him. He wore his usual dark orange undershirt, a black waistcoat and dress pants, with his gemmed bolo tie around his neck. He still wore his red gloves, but there wasn’t a hat, mask, or balaclava in sight.

He ran a gloved hand through his messy hair and glared at them, “Why is everyone staring at me?”

Midnight leaned forward with a teasing smirk, “I never thought such a good looking face would be under that scary mask.”

“Midnight!” Present Mic screeched, “You can’t just say that!”

“What? I’m just saying he looks good!! It’s a compliment!”

Aizawa and Cementoss both facepalmed at the same time.

Eri scooted out of her chair and ran up to Atsuhiro to throw her arms around his waist. His red face deepened in color when she looked up at him with her innocent doe eyes and stated plainly, “You finally showed your face! I’m so proud of you, Uncle Compress!”

Midnight squealed, "That's so cute!!"

Atsuhiro sputtered as his face continued to plunge deeper into the crimson shades, "I-It's not cute! I don't do cute!!"

"Oh, stop being so dramatic!" Spinner cackled.

"Besides, aren't you glad that Eri's proud of you?" Morgana asked.

"W-well, of course I am, but-"

"Who was the one who went out to get her cat-themed pajamas again?" Gentle Criminal smirked as he traced his facial hair, "And who spent a long time talking about such things with a few ladies who thought you were her father? I think it was rather adorable that you care so much for a little girl."

"Th-that's.... I-"

"WHAT!?" Present Mic yelled.

Midnight slammed her hands on the table and shot to her feet, "I need more details ASAP!"

Atsuhiro sighed in defeat and patted Eri's head, "My image is forever ruined now. Thank you, my dear."

"You're welcome." She whispered as she let go and headed back to her seat.

Kurose glanced back and forth between Ren and the bright red Atsuhiro, humming.

"What is it, Thirteen?" Ectoplasm asked.

"You two look so much alike. If I didn't know better, I would think that the two of you are related somehow."

Nezu's ears shot up and his black eyes sparkled.

Atsuhiro rolled his eyes, “Ren, can you please whip up the strongest brew you have? I can already tell it’s going to be a long day.”

“I’ll get right on that... dad. ” Ren said with a devilish grin.

Atsuhiro’s face fell in his hands while several of the teachers and vigilantes burst out into laughter.

Nezu continued to study the two of them throughout breakfast.

The door opened with wailing hinges, and the harsh lighting flickered at such a sudden entrance. Tsukauchi walked in with a mask of calm fury as he slapped the thick folders on the table, the one sitting on the other side didn’t even flinch as the metal table rattled.

“It seems a night in Tartarus helped calm you down.” Tsukauchi said as he pulled out the chair and sat down, “Are you ready to talk?”

The Doctor’s mustache puffed up, “Why bother? It’s not like you’d ever understand how brilliant my work was! It’s all for nothing because you heathens ruined everything!”

“You’re right, I don’t understand.” Tsukauchi stated, and the Doctor was about to say something snide when Tsukauchi interrupted, “I don’t understand how anyone could inflict such pain on so many people without showing a shred of remorse, including children and hundreds of innocent civilians. I don’t understand how one man like yourself had gone unchecked until now. I don’t understand how you came to serve All For One the way you have.”

“It was all for the sake of progress!”

“Progress.” Tsukauchi frowned, “Progress towards what?”

The Doctor huffed, turning his head away with a sneer.

Tsukauchi sighed, “Fine, be that way. But let me help you understand something. I have all the time in the world to interrogate you. We can do this song and dance for weeks, months, years. Maybe leaving you in isolation for a while will loosen your lips. I’ve heard many villains eventually go insane when left down there long enough.”

Sweat appeared on the Doctor’s bald forehead, and he slowly swiveled his face back to Tsukauchi.

“Let’s start with something simple. And you better tell the truth, my quirk knows when you’re lying.”

Tsukauchi took the top file off of the pile, opened it, and turned it around so that it faced the Doctor. One side showed an old student profile, while the other held information about the notorious villain Kurogiri. Tsukauchi laced his hands together and leaned forward, his expression was like stone, his next question laced with such coldness that Tartarus seemed warm and cozy in comparison.

“Tell me everything about what you did to Oboro Shirakumo and how you turned him into Kurogiri.”

So the Doctor has finally been taken down and the BNHA Thieves have everything they need to secure their future freedom from U.A.! The Cultural Festival is so close and you guys have no idea how EXCITED I am for it!

Update Schedule:

Improvised Song Dedicated To The Next Prime Minister's Ship -
March 25th

Voracious Waltz - April 15th

May 6th

May 20th

I'm keeping the May chapter titles hidden for now because I want genuine reactions to the titles themselves ;)

Improvised Song Dedicated To The Next Prime Min...

Chapter 89: Improvised Song Dedicated To The Next Prime Minister's Ship

Aizawa turned to Joker, "I thought you said nothing happened."

"No, I said we were fine. There's a difference!"

Aaahhhh we've reached some pretty sweet milestones!! 10k kudos, 2k bookmarks, and over 700k hits??? That's so crazy and I can't even comprehend it sometimes, thank you guys so much! It means a lot that you've been patient and have stuck with me this long as we close in towards the end. Literally we may only have around 10 chapters left....

In other news, if any of you noticed the word count of the fic going down within the past week or so, I've been really editing the chapters of the fic starting from the beginning! I've currently edited up to chapter 23 and will slowly continue through this whole fic. They flow so much more smoothly in my current style, and it's been really cool to look back to nearly 3 years ago and just see how much I've improved since then.

There's small additions too, like another few lines between Joker and Yaldy in chapter 2, more Brotherhood lore in chapter 7, making Silver Falcon simultaneously worse than before but making his ass kicking all the more satisfying... among others.

Anywho, here's the last chapter before the festival starts!

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

~~ 4 Days Until The Festival ~~

Jagged ice spires would've hit their mark if not for the spirals of wind thrown at the same time, colliding in a harmless arctic breeze that left Margaret unharmed.

"Hey!" The blue skinned woman snarled, her onyx hair and the pale rings floating around her quivering, "If you interrupt my attack one more time, I'll skin you alive!"

"Ohoho!" A voluptuous woman dressed in flowing silks with an elaborate veil, sat upon a scarlet dragon with seven heads and ten horns. Kings and misers would beg for her hand in marriage, but all would scream in terror if they ever looked directly upon her, as her face was a skull. She raised her golden goblet, stinking with the abominations of her acts, "Perhaps... the mother goddess of the earth is simply no match for the impure queen."

Cybele raised her twin swords, the pommels of which were decorated with the heads of bulls, "How dare you!"

"How dare I what, darling? Speak the truth of me being better than you?"

"Enough!" Odin slammed his spear into the ground, golden lightning striking around him, "Such ceaseless bickering is an insult to the Trickster!"

"My, my..." Gabriel hovered nearby, focused on another battle entirely, "Isn't this nostalgic, Fafnir?"

"Like father, like daughter, ho!" Black Frost yelled beside Gabriel.

Kohryu sighed as he circled overhead, "Should I be proud or weary for having such feisty grandchildren?"

Fafnir cackled, “Obviously proud! We’re unafraid to speak our minds and can back up our threats with real power!!”

“Stop yelling!” Alice stomped her foot, “We’re making it hard for Big Brother to concentrate!”

The eight Personas looked to the Trickster, who sat in the center of the Challenge Room in the lotus position. His eyes were closed, his sweaty brow hardened.

Margaret was on one side of the Challenge Room, facing Cybele, Mother Harlot, Fafnir, and Odin.

On the other was Theodore vs. Alice, Gabriel, Black Frost, and Kohryu.

Joker and the Attendants spent the last week increasing the amount of Personas Joker could have out at once, in preparation for the upcoming Festival. Several rounds of intense battles lasting 5 minutes each, and Joker would lose the round if either Attendant reached him.

He clawed his way up to eight. Eight Personas. Only half the way through the stock and Joker felt the strain. It was as if he sat at the darkest and most crushing depths of the ocean, only to look over and see another chasm plunging deeper into the untapped potential in his soul.

“Being distracted will spell your doom.” Margaret said with her calm smile, “Megidolaon.”

“No!” Fafnir howled while the other Personas reared back.

A second of panic allowed Margaret to jump between the gaps in their defence, and Joker felt her hand softly brush the top of his head.

Joker opened his eyes, calling Gabriel's team back into the mindscape.

"You did well," Theodore said, "But this round is ours."

"He won three rounds out of seven." Margaret ruffled Joker's hair, "We should be proud that he came so far in such a short time. Holding such immense power at once is no small matter."

Theodore matched her smile, "Indeed. Take a moment to catch your breath, Joker."

Cybele sighed as she lowered her twin swords, "Was my acting so terrible?"

"No darling, you were superb." Mother Harlot's teeth chattered as she turned her terrifying visage towards Odin, the heads of her scarlet beast growling, "It was this oaf that ruined the illusion of our bad teamwork."

"You're right." Cybele sliced her sword towards Odin, a gale ruffling his hair and long white cape, "That's for ruining our fun, you idiot. Maybe I should skin you alive instead."

Odin scowled and returned to Joker without a retort.

Cybele grinned at Mother Harlot, "Oh, I think we upset him."

"Poor child." Mother Harlot raised her foul goblet, "If we can tease the All-Father to such a degree, then imagine what atrocities we could release upon Shadows together. I look forward to such a delicious rapture."

"So do I."

All Personas returned to Joker, who sighed in relief as he took a second to reflect on what's happened this week.

They've been on their toes since they stole from Nezu's office, as if waiting to be dragged away because they somehow fumbled and got found out. La Brava poured over the precious data every moment she could in the safety of the Velvet Room and, with time, had every confidence to make her new virus work.

Meanwhile, when Joker wasn't perfecting his Festival performance, he spent time in the Velvet Room. Training, fusing, meditating to master new bonds for the Compendium, and Itemization for their rapidly expanding armory.

Rinse and repeat.

"I am Bishamonten. Your foes are nothing before my might. I shall become a mask and grant you new power..."

"I am Raphael. I shall become a mask and provide support for your health, both mentally and physically."

"I am Thor-"

"I am Belial-"

"I am Kali-"

"I am Vishnu-"

"I am Uriel-"

"I am Dionysus-"

"Me Byakhee. If you so desire, me will fight with soul you have!"

"... I am Michael. In the name of the light within you, I shall become your mask!"

One by one, all of these new voices and more sang within his soul as they found their new home in the Compendium.

Except for what happened just yesterday.

"I am Siegfried. Your soul shall act as a tool to transform my dauntless might into-"

Fafnir ripped himself out of the mindscape and assaulted the Velvet Room with a roar that shook the chains overhead. Fafnir launched himself at Siegfried, who raised his mighty blade to strike in return. The Attendants acted. Chains snapped around either of them to restrain their movements, and Joker ordered them both to be Itemized.

Spinner got the physical attack accessory he wanted from Siegfried, who wasn't around long enough to be saved in the Compendium.

Satanael severely scolded Fafnir when he was brought back, but the dragon kept his smug amusement burning in his heart.

In the end, Cybele, the Ultimate Priestess Persona who dominated over wind, took Baal's place. Mother Harlot was the Ultimate Empress Persona embodying ice in both personality and magic to permanently replace Byakko. Michael and the rest stayed in the Compendium for fusion and to give Lavenza more options for battle.

Hitoshi sat, slack-jawed, "Your Personas terrify me."

"Join the club!" Shuichi remarked, visibly shaken.

"Merp!"

Atsuhiro placed his empty dishes in a marble and stuck it in his pocket, "Have I ever said how happy I am that they're on our side?"

Tobita chuckled, "About three times now."

"And every time it becomes more true."

Joker laughed as Margaret helped him to his feet, "It's not all that bad... is it?"

“Are you kidding me?” Hitoshi gestured to the Challenge Room’s giant guillotine, the barred walls, and the Attendants, “I understand why you introduced me to Lavenza before the rest of this place.”

“Moon!” Elizabeth lurched at Hitoshi so fast he staggered backwards, “I demand to know where you got these cookies. They taste so much better than the ones in the flimsy plastic packaging!”

Lavenza held a jam-filled cookie between her thumb and pointer finger, smiling at Joker, “I told you she would like him.”

“Elizabeth,” Theodore he pinched the bridge of his nose, “You’re scaring him.”

“Uh...” Hitoshi avoided looking at Elizabeth’s savage grin, “Because they’re homemade. My parents make desserts like these for a living.”

Elizabeth’s eyes sparkled, “So you can bring more?”

“I guess so? I can bring a cake or brownies, too. It doesn’t just have to be cookies.”

“Yes! I call first dibs!”

“Elizabeth, that’s enough.” Margaret pulled her sister away, “If you continue to frighten him then he won’t share anything with you.”

Elizabeth pouted, but finally backed off.

“Are we going to watch Ren-nii fight some more?” Eri sat between Kaito and Lavenza, sipping from a carton of apple juice.

“You’re not scared?” Hitoshi asked.

Eri shook her head, “Why would I be? This is a safe place.”

“Oh.” The last of Hitoshi’s nerves fell away with Eri’s honesty, “I guess... whoever is singing has a really nice voice.”

Theodore smiled, "I'm sure Belladonna appreciates the comment."

Joker blinked, "Who's Belladonna?"

"You didn't think the song came from nowhere, did you?" Elizabeth asked, "They haven't shown their faces for years, but Belladonna and Nameless have been an integral part of the Velvet Room before any of us were even born."

"We also had the Demon Painter." Theodore added. "But he left the Velvet Room years ago."

Joker tilted his head, "Interesting."

At that moment, a timer dinged. Manami picked up the watch and silenced it.

"That marks the end of our lunch." Morgana said as he stretched beside Atsuhiro, "We should get back."

"Ugh, we're going to be watching a bunch of brats set up for the Festival. How boring." Atsuhiro muttered, "No offence to Ren or Hitoshi."

"Hey, my classmates and I are putting up the final touches on our totally badass haunted house today." Hitoshi said as the others packed away leftovers. Elizabeth almost looked distraught when they took the cookie container away and gave it to Hitoshi, "I don't want to be late."

Ren smiled as he let his costume vanish, "The closest exit is my dorm room. We better hurry."

The permanent doors in Ground Beta and the supply closet were no longer needed, so the only active ones were at the USJ and in Ren's room. The Attendants waved them off as they went through the wall of light, and the vigilantes flooded out into Ren's dorm from his open closet.

Atsuhiro chuckled as Ren closed his closet, "You know, this reminds me of an old story where children went through a wardrobe to enter another world."

"Can you tell it to me sometime?" Eri asked.

"Of course, my dear." Atsuhiro said with a soft smile, "I'll see if Nezu can scrounge up a copy somehow."

Hitoshi snorted as he tucked the container under his arm, "See you later."

The rest of the vigilantes said their goodbyes and left, leaving Ren, Morgana, Kaito, and Eri.

Kaito looked at Ren, "Any plans for the rest of the day? You've been working non-stop for days and could use a break."

Eri gave Ren and Morgana the puppy dog eyes. "We could take pictures together?"

"I can't say no to that." Ren said as he patted Eri's head, "I need to stop by the teacher's lounge first."

Kaito raised a brow, "For what?"

Ren walked over to his desk and grabbed a folder, "Nezu wanted a list of everything my Personas and I are doing for the Cultural Festival. Something about handing out copies to the heroes coming in for security so they don't freak out."

Morgana stared at him, "You spent hours last night doing a single list?"

"Not just that." He cracked open the folder for Morgana to see the rest of the contents..

Morgana winced, "Oh... I see."

Ren closed the folder, "Let's go."

They left the dorm and headed towards the main building, but they didn't get far before they faced a problem. The Cultural Festival was days away and students were everywhere, setting up signs and posters and stands, brightening up most surfaces with streamers and balloons of every color.

"We should ask Aizawa to come get us." Morgana huddled against Ren's shoulder, "We're going to be surrounded as soon as someone spots us."

"Nezu must've known it would be this busy and yet he didn't order any of the teachers to be at the dorms." Ren smirked, "We're going to prove that we don't need constant babysitters doing everything for us."

Kaito held up a hand, "You think this is some test from Nezu?"

"Would you put it past him?" Ren countered.

"...No."

"Uh... what are we gonna do?" Morgana said, his tail flicking.

Ren smirked, "We go through the crowd in style."

"You're not going to change your mind, are you." Morgana said with a soft chuckle. "Let's do this, then."

Ren snapped his fingers, donning his costume with blue embers.

Kaito blinked at the two Personas who rose beside Joker, both kneeling down as if expecting to be ridden. "You can't be serious."

"C'mon, it'll be fun!" Joker said, grinning from ear to ear.

Cerberus wagged his tail, "Can the Aeon and Hermit ride me? We'd all be matching!"

Kaito deadpanned, but Eri looked up at him and tugged on his sleeve, "Please?"

His expression softened, "... Alright."

Cerberus wiggled in excitement as Joker set Eri between Cerberus' shoulders while Kaito rolled his eyes and jumped on without help.

"Ohoho, this will be entertaining." Mother Harlot said as three of her beast heads nudged Joker's shoulders or back.

Joker hopped up behind Mother Harlot, copying how she rode side-saddle with his legs crossed and a smirk on his face. The folder was tucked safely under his arm.

"Does Mercurius want to join in?" Joker said as Morgana sat beside him, "This could be his time to shine!"

"I-" Morgana blinked rapidly, "Yes, he does."

With another swirl of blue fire, Mercurius joined the entourage with his staff held high. Morgana smiled as his Persona twirled in the air.

Mother Harlot patted her beast when they were settled and stepped out of the shade together. The effect was immediate. Students froze and dozens of eyes fell on them within seconds. Boxes and jaws were dropped. The bobbing beast heads, with their jutting fangs or low guttural growls, cleared the path in front of them.

Joker waved at students as phones were taken out.

Kaito kept his head low as they passed, but Eri watched in muted wonder as she was high enough to stare over their heads.

"I don't see my green child." Cerberus whispered.

"He's probably elsewhere." Joker replied, "I don't see anybody from 1-A around."

"To think that this is just a small fraction of the students in this school." Satanael said as they neared the end of the crowd, "It boggles the mind."

The front doors were already propped open. Instead of dismounting and continuing through the school on foot like Joker planned, Mother Harlot shamelessly walked right in. Two students carrying boxes stumbled back into the wall at their sudden entrance.

Ibara stared in shock before the thorny vines that were her hair wriggled like angry serpents.

Kendo grabbed her arm and they fled outside.

"You need not worry about her." Mother Harlot's chuckle snapped Joker out of his confusion, "Such jealousy and hatred over one so free of inhibitions.... I almost feel sorry for that pious girl."

Morgana and Joker exchanged bewildered glances, and Joker shrugged.

Thankfully the school hallways were wide enough for their entourage to continue without trouble as students watched them pass with unfiltered awe. At long last, they reached the teacher's dorm.

Morgana sighed in relief when Joker's feet landed on the floor, making sure to give each beast head a good scratch under the chin. Cerberus knelt down and Kaito got off first before he lifted Eri down. However, instead of returning to Joker, the Personas chose to lay down on either side of the door. Mercurius didn't go back, either.

"Such a grand entrance requires a grand exit, correct?" Mother Harlot asked.

Cerberus wagged his tail in agreement.

Morgana made a face as if he regretted getting up this morning.

With a smirk, Joker stepped inside the teacher's lounge. Kaito and Eri followed. Six people looked up: Aizawa, Nezu, Hound Dog, Snipe, and most surprising, Risumi and Ayumu. Nezu gave Joker a praising look. Joker and Morgana saw that Nezu had his laptop open to certain camera feeds.

Aizawa was on his feet, concerned, "Why are you in costume? Did something happen?"

"We're fine, Eraser." Joker said as he waltzed up to Nezu's desk and placed the folder on it, "I put everything together like you asked, and then some."

"Excellent!" Nezu flipped it open to read through it. He froze when he reached the part that made Ren's hand cramp last night, "Hmm, I see. Yes, this will do just fine."

Joker nodded and turned to Risumi and Ayumu, "What are you two doing here?"

Risumi smiled as she nursed a cup of tea, "We've gotten permission to set up our own stand during the Festival. We just finished working out the final details with Nezu."

"As a fundraiser to help us get back on our feet." Ayumu said next to her, lazily smiling at Joker, "We were thinking you could help us pick out a menu. Maybe cook if you had time during the Festival?"

"I'd love to help out! I'll have plenty of time to kill before my performance." Joker smiled, "How about we use the recipes in that one notebook I gave you?"

Risumi looked down in her lap, "That was destroyed with the Blue Lotus."

Joker's heart sank, "Oh..."

"You could just write everything down again." Kaito suggested.

“But it could get destroyed again, couldn’t it?” Ayumu asked.

“Power Loader has special notebooks in his lab.” Hound Dog said, “The paper actually made out of stone. It’s nearly indestructible, water-proof, and can last for several years without wear and tear. Perfect for someone who deals with students like Hatsume on a regular basis.”

Risumi and Ayumu glanced at Joker in eagerness, “Consider it done. I’ll add some new recipes, too. I’ve been learning a lot from Lunch Rush.”

“Thank you, Ren. We appreciate it.” Risumi said gently before her eyes trailed to Eri, “Is this the little girl Hitoshi keeps talking about?”

Eri huddled behind Joker’s coat tails.

“Yeah,” Joker placed a gentle hand on Eri’s head, “Eri, these are Hitoshi’s parents, Risumi and Ayumu.”

Eri stepped out of Joker’s shadow, her hands fidgeting together, “Hitoshi is really nice. Are they nice, too?”

“They are.” Joker knelt down next to her, “Along with Kaito, they were some of the first people to help me out.”

Aizawa and the other teachers winced in regret.

Ayumu snorted, “Please. We helped you? You’re the one who saved our bacon from Silver Falcon.”

“And improved our business, became like a brother to Hitoshi, became our favorite hero, saved our lives again after what happened to the Blue Lotus.” Risumi counted on her fingers, “Just to name a few.”

Joker felt his face heat up.

“Would you like to come take pictures with us?” Kaito asked, “I’m sure Eri would love to get to know you two better.”

Eri nodded.

Risumi exchanged a warm look with Ayumu, “Of course we would, sweetie.”

“Before you do,” Nezu interjected as he safely tucked the folder in his desk, “There’s something I’d like to show Joker and Mona.”

“What is it?” Joker asked.

Nezu grinned, “Cementoss has finished your stadium! Well, most of it - Power Loader is working on the final touch as we speak!”

“It’s done already!?” Morgana cried.

“Wow. So he wasn’t lying when he said he could do it.” Joker said.

Nezu beamed as he hopped down from his chair.

Aizawa sighed, “I’ll go with. I don’t trust any of you to stay out of trouble.”

Hound Dog gave a pointed look to Snipe, who sunk down in his chair as Joker and the others turned to leave. A growl was all it took for Snipe to jump out of his seat.

“I-I’ll tag along too!”

They stopped in the hallway, all adults except Kaito freezing at the Personas staring innocently at them.

Aizawa turned to Joker, “I thought you said nothing happened.”

“No, I said we were fine . There’s a difference!”

The heads of Mother Harlot's beast nuzzled Joker as he went to pet its side, "We had to make a dramatic entrance into the school so the students wouldn't swarm us."

"Wait, is that why Nezu was suddenly attached to the cameras?" Snipe asked incredulously.

Nezu cackled, "The students' reactions were gold!"

Aizawa face-palmed, "They can go back now."

"Not yet!" Nezu skittered towards Mother Harlot with the widest grin, "We can ride to the stadium!"

"Nezu, no ." Aizawa snapped.

"Nezu, yes!" Nezu beamed up at Mother Harlot, "May I?"

One of Mother Harlot's beast heads lowered to the ground, "You may, Devil." She said.

Nezu hopped aboard, grabbing the single horn to keep himself balanced. The head rose above the others to offer him the highest perspective like the little overlord he was. Joker shook his head with a good-natured smile as he jumped up next to Mother Harlot again with Morgana.

Eri and Kaito climbed on Cerberus, the Persona glancing at the others, "You want to ride on me too? I have plenty of room!"

"Er... no thanks." Snipe backed away with his hands up, "I like my feet firm on the ground."

"I'll walk." Aizawa muttered.

"Hmph, suit yourselves." Mother Harlot looked at Risumi and Ayumu, "What of you, Strength?"

“Sure.” Ayumu said, “I’d feel better if Risumi didn’t have to walk in her condition.”

“Ayumu!” She playfully smacked his shoulder, “I’ll be fine. I’m not even showing yet!”

“Still...”

“It’ll be awkward for me to carry you.” Mercurius said.

Fafnir pulled himself into reality, bowing so low that his nose touched the ground, “Allow me to be your steed, Strength. Let me repent by also being your guardian during the Festival.”

Risumi and Ayumu exchanged surprised glances before Ayumu placed his hand on Fafnir’s head, “You don’t need to repent for anything, pal. You protected Risumi and our unborn child when they needed you the most, and I could never repay you for that.”

Fafnir lifted his head, “But-”

“No buts.” Ayumu said with a hardened brow, “Let’s just call it even and move on, alright?”

Fafnir snorted, “... If that’s what you wish. Now, shall we?”

Ayumu helped Risumi up before climbing on himself, Fafnir kept low like a lizard to not knock them off his back.

“Are you sure you don’t want a ride?” Joker teased as he stared at Aizawa.

“No.” Aizawa stormed past.

Snipe scrambled after him.

Nezu cackled as he pointed down the hall, “Onwards!”

Mother Harlot raised her foul goblet as the beast trailed after Aizawa and Snipe, followed by Cerberus, Fafnir, and Mercurius last, "A royal procession worthy of the Trickster! Why did this not happen the moment you stepped in the school?"

Morgana sighed, "We had other things to worry about!"

"Relax, Morgana." Joker said as he pet him, "Why are you so tense?"

"I-I know. Sorry." Morgana sank into his partner's side in mutual comfort, "It's just with the Festival so close.... you know what this could mean for us."

"Of course I do, but there's no reason to be." Joker kept his eyes forward as they reached the school entrance, "Look at Eri. She still hasn't smiled yet, but we're so close to a breakthrough. We can't risk her feeling worse if she sees that we're tense."

Morgana's eyes softened, "So you're keeping a cool head for her?"

Joker smiled at him, eyes twinkling.

Cybele suddenly appeared in their entourage. She grabbed Mercurius and the both of them twirled through the air in a graceful dance that called the wind. Students cheered when confetti and streamers were swept up and over the Personas. The pair ended their dance with a deep bow.

Morgana looked back at Cerberus. Eri's crimson eyes held more wonder than ever, and yet the rest of her face never showed the happiness bursting within.

"I... suppose you're right." Morgana whispered, "But even so, when are we going to tell Eri the truth? We can't keep lying to her forever."

"It depends how our mission during the Festival goes." Joker waved at a few students taking a pictures, "For now, let her be as happy as she can be. Call me selfish, but I want to see her smile just once before we have to break her heart.”

Morgana looked like he wanted to say something, but held his tongue.

They spent the rest of the way in a contemplative silence, not knowing that their conversation was heard by Nezu’s keen ears.

Hitoshi finished putting up drapes. He grabbed another box of Halloween supplies and went through one of the dark passageways they built inside their classroom. He came upon his class rep and two of his classmates huddled together, whispering over their phones.

“Hey, I finished with the windows. Where do you want these?”

“Shinsou! Why didn’t you tell us!?” His class rep said with a ferocious grin, but she had nothing on Elizabeth’s intensity.

“Uh... tell you what?”

“That Joker was going to do a parade today!”

“A what ?”

The class rep showed him her phone, open to a pictures of Joker on social media. He was waving and smiling from Mother Harlot’s back, and other pictures revealed Eri and Kaito on Cerberus, along with-

“Why are my parents on Fafnir!?”

“You didn’t know?” The class rep asked, her eyebrows shooting up.

“No!”

“Ugh, my sister in 3-E just texted me saying those small asshole robots cut them off from the students. So we can’t go see them now!”

“Where were they headed?” Hitoshi asked.

“Towards that huge stadium Cementoss-sensei’s been building.”

Hitoshi turned away. Their whispers went ignored as he set the box down and whipped out his phone.

[The Moon]

Really, Ren?

I leave you alone for twenty minutes

TWENTY MINUTES

And you’re all over social media WITH MY PARENTS

I feel so betrayed

How could my own brother do this D:

It took several minutes for Ren to reply.

[The World]

I’ll make it up to you with curry and movies? Your parents offered for all of us to spend the night at their apartment tonight.

Oh, and Alice is looking forward to the haunted house.

[The Moon]

Fine. I forgive you.

He shoved his phone in his pocket and turned towards his class rep, "Joker said Alice is excited for our haunted house."

"Yes!" She pumped her fist, "We'll be the best class that beats all other classes!!"

The other classmates cheered, and Hitoshi couldn't help but smirk.

"Wow!" Morgana's jaw dropped, "I never thought it would be this huge!"

They stood in the center of the massive stadium, high walls filled with stands which rose several hundred feet all around them. The stage they stood on was large and circular with a variety of different platforms scattered about.

Kohryu floated around the vast stadium, speckling it with golden sunbursts from the light pouring in from the open ceiling.

"Well, Kohryu?" Joker said as he looked up.

Kohryu descended to the main stage, "There is enough room for me to maneuver around comfortably. Quite impressive."

"Thank you!" Nezu stood beside Joker, paws tucked behind his back, "This stadium is 43% larger than those of the Sports Festival! I'm glad you find it agreeable."

Kohryu bowed before returning to Joker.

"Now we just need the final touch." Joker said.

"That will go on tomorrow." Nezu beamed, "Meanwhile, the smaller ones have already been built around campus, and the cards will be ready by the morning of the Festival. All that is left is for you to manage them as you see fit."

“Good. Do you think it’ll be enough?” Joker whispered as he looked to the others marveling at the sheer size of the stadium, “If it isn’t...”

“We’ll do our best,” Nezu leveled Joker with a curious glance, “But we cannot discount a few stragglers being out on the grounds. If we play our cards right, then nobody outside of those in the know will suspect anything heinous.”

“That’s the best outcome we can hope for.” Morgana whispered, “And if not... well, we’ll cross that bridge when we come to it.”

Nezu nodded, “There is one other reason why I wanted to bring you here... away from certain ears.”

Joker glanced towards Eri, who was currently distracting everyone else on the opposite side of the open stage, “And that is?”

“I want to have a meeting with the heroes who will guard the USJ tomorrow.” Nezu smiled as Joker and Morgana gave him skewed glances, so he continued, “Usually, I do love seeing their reactions whenever I drop something substantial on them out of the blue. However, if what you’ve explained about the unexpected Persona accessories is true, then they’ll need a few days to train with them.”

“We’re not telling them the full truth until after the Cultural Festival ends.” Joker said, frowning.

“I agree that would be best.” Nezu said, “This meeting tomorrow is to explain what will happen, what Shadows are, and to train with their new gear to help prepare them for their roles to the best of their abilities. The drawing you gave me earlier will greatly help in that regard!”

Joker sighed, but he nodded, “It’s only fair.”

Morgana grimaced, “How do you think they’ll take it? We’re practically shoving all of this on them with no warning.”

“They’re pro heroes who’re used to daring missions being dropped in their laps with little to no warning. They’ll do just fine.” Nezu studied the duo with an intense gaze, “But are you ready to share your story after the Festival is over? We only have a handful of days left before they know the truth. Everything may change at the drop of a hat.”

Joker stuck his hands in his pockets. “I convinced someone that the Metaverse existed while I was drugged and beaten within an inch of my life, and they ended up saving me from assassination.” Joker stared off into the distance, Morgana looked heartbroken while Nezu flinched, “When we told La Brava, Gentle Criminal, Kaito, and Hitoshi our story... the only one who believed us was Kaito. They all came around eventually, but seeing the pity on their faces, thinking we were just crazy or confused, hurt more than I like to admit.”

“Amamiya...” Nezu murmured.

“Thankfully, Spinner and Mr. Compress believed us because they were the first see the Velvet Room.” Joker sighed, “I don’t know how I’ll manage if the heroes do the same thing as La Brava and the others.”

Morgana puffed up, “It won’t be the same, Ren! We’ll get our proof no matter what!”

“I hope you’re right.”

Nezu patted Joker’s leg, bringing his gaze down to meet the rat’s, “You’ll have my support no matter what. The staff already care deeply for you and your team. Please believe in them as I do.”

A smile cracked through Joker’s melancholy, and he firmly nodded.

“Ren-nii!” Eri ran over to them and latched onto Joker’s arm, “Can we take a picture of all of us here?”

Joker grinned at her, “Sure, Eri.”

They left the stadium after getting the picture and spent an afternoon of leisure walking around the school grounds, their photo collection growing with additional pictures of Risumi and Ayumu as well as any Personas who joined at random.

Hitoshi and the other vigilantes rejoined them at the end of the day, and Risumi and Ayumu beamed when they said they'd join in on the movie night. Their dorm looked more like a comfortable little cottage rather than the apartment style dorms of the students and teachers, complete with their own private yard and garden.

The group scattered to get what they needed for a movie night, but Aizawa suddenly grabbed Snipe and shoved him in Ren's direction with a stern look.

Ren raised a brow as they stood in front of Ren's dorm.

"Uh, so..." Snipe cleared his throat and floundered for words.

"What is it?" Morgana asked, "Cat got your tongue?"

"N-no, it's just.... I..." Snipe deflated. He took another minute to gather himself before speaking again, "I'm having a training session with Shinsou tomorrow morning, the last one before the Cultural Festival. Would you... like to join?"

"Training for what?" Ren asked.

"Handling firearms. I'm really impressed with how you taught him the basics, and he's improved so much since we first started!"

Ren smiled, "I'd love to."

"Okay, great. Fantastic!" Snipe slowly backed away, "I'll... uh... see you tomorrow then."

Snipe all but fled down the hall.

"That was weird." Morgana said as they went into Ren's room.

“I’ve heard he feels bad for shooting me at the USJ.”

“Oh. How do you feel about it, Ren?”

“It was months ago.” Ren shrugged. “I’ve gotten over it by now.”

“Apparently, he doesn’t feel the same way.” Morgana said as his expression brightened, “Maybe we could use this to our advantage. It’ll be easier for us to get him on our side if he feels he has to make it up to you.”

“That’s a mildly devious way to put it.”

Morgana flicked his tail, “At this point, do we really have a choice?”

Ren didn’t say anything as he grabbed blankets and pillows. It was odd to see the infamous vigilantes, plus two cats and a little girl, rushing towards another dorm with their arms full of fluffy pillows.

Risumi and Ayumu swept them inside.

Their cottage was open concept, with the living room, dining area, and kitchen only separated by sleek counters. There was another hallway that led to the bathroom and bedroom, while a pair of patio doors let in plenty of sunlight.

Hitoshi was already setting out blankets and rearranging the furniture in the living room, the television prepped and ready.

But there was something white lounging on the back of the couch, blinking at them.

“When did you guys get a cat?” Ren asked.

“Oh, she’s not ours.” Hitoshi said as he finished arranging pillows, “Her name is Marshmallow. She’s Aizawa-sensei’s cat.”

“Why is she here and not in the teacher’s dorm?” Morgana asked as Marshmallow sniffed curiously when Ren held out his hand to her.

“He didn’t know how Lady Stubbs and Morgana would react to her, so we offered to look after her until you settled in. She was originally with Hitoshi, but after what happened with us...” Ayumu trailed off.

“I’ve been so busy with training anyway.” Hitoshi said, “She’s better off with you guys.”

“It’s been nice having a cat around.” Risumi gave Marshmallow an affectionate pet, “Maybe we’ll get a cat or two after the Blue Lotus is rebuilt.”

Hitoshi snorted, “I wouldn’t object.”

“Merp!” Lady Stubbs jumped onto the back of the couch. They tensed as the two felines sniffed one another, but there wasn’t so much as a hiss or a growl, and they ended up rubbing their faces together with loud purrs.

“I don’t think we’ll have any problems, should Marshmallow decide to come back to the teacher’s dorm.” Tobita said with a warm smile.

“Does anyone want curry?” Ren asked as the living room became an explosion of warmth and comfort. “I should get started on it soon.”

“As if you really have to ask.” Ayumu smirked. “It’s been so long since Risumi or I have had any.”

Risumi smiled, “We baked a batch of brownies this morning. We can have those for dessert.”

“One huge pot of curry, coming right up.”

They spent the rest of the night nestled close together, eating curry and brownies as they were enraptured by the collection of movies gifted to the Shinsou family by Nezu. Eri was surrounded by all of the cats, and she ended up falling asleep with Marshmallow splayed out on top of her like a dutiful protector.

It felt like old times at the Blue Lotus or the Raven's Nest... or other memories of Leblanc.

Just for one night, Ren could forget about the impending Festival.

~~ 3 Days Until The Festival ~~

"I'm blaming you if we're late." Hitoshi deadpanned.

"You needed the extra sleep." Ren said as they walked out of the small cottage the next morning, "You were so comfortable all snuggled up in those blankets."

"Ha ha, very funny." Hitoshi playfully glared at him, "Let's just hurry up."

Ren smirked as they headed towards the school. They paused at the threshold between the early morning crowd of students already continuing their work on the Festival.

Hitoshi blinked at Ren, "Don't tell me you plan on doing another parade. I've been getting messages about it since yesterday."

Ren laughed, "Don't think that's necessary."

He felt Mother Harlot's disappointment as he continued walking. Some students stopped and stared, some smiling and taking pictures, others waving. One or two frowned or scowled and turned away from him.

But nobody crowded them like Ren feared.

A few students were brave enough to come up and ask for a picture with him or an autograph. One girl happily showed off a 'Hee Ho!' charm hanging on her phone, and another boy had a mask pin on his uniform, but compared to the massive swell of students that eerily stared at him every morning he went to Ground Beta, this was... nice. Strange, but nice. The complete opposite of the treatment he got at the start of his year at Shujin.

He got the feeling the students wouldn't be as respectful without Kohryu's show or the 'Persona Parade' yesterday, lest they risk angering beings of myth and legend.

They made it into the building fifteen minutes later.

"You're going to have your own fan club." Hitoshi said with a smirk, "If you don't already."

"No thanks," Ren replied as they walked through the school, nearing a corner, "Maybe I'll ask Nezu to prevent something like that."

Hitoshi shrugged, "I don't think it'll stop people even if Nezu doesn't let them form an official club."

Ren collided with someone when they turned the corner. He staggered back as a box dropped to the floor, costumes and fake jewelry spilling everywhere. The student was flat on their backside, staring up at him with shock, which turned into venom.

"Sorry." Ren helped place everything back into the box with Hitoshi.

The student was frozen, glaring at them.

Hitoshi picked up the box as Ren stood and held out his hand for Ibara.

"Don't touch me, snake." She bat his hand away and stood up by herself.

Hitoshi glared, "Hey, chill out. It was just an accident."

She reached into her pocket, still glaring at Ren as her hair wriggled, "If you've come to taint this school with your sins, then you have another thing coming."

Ren blinked slowly, "... Excuse me?"

"I've kept my reservations all throughout your illegal ventures. I had hope for your soul after you saved my classmates at the Summer Camp, but then Kamino happened and you summoned down demonic forces to murder somebody in cold blood. Yesterday was the final nail in your coffin." She took a threatening step closer, but Ren didn't move, "You proudly rode into the school on the beast with seven heads and ten horns with the Whore Of Babylon beside you. If what the news says is true, and you are the Demon Lord destined to end our world, then I will stop you here and now."

Ren staggered as she threw a small container towards him, its lid open to splash him with cold water. He blinked and wiped water away from his eyes, his hair dripping and his shirt damp, and gave her a deadpanned look. A long moment of silence stretched awkwardly between them, Ibara and Ren stared at one another while Hitoshi's jaw dropped.

Her eyes widened when he didn't spontaneously combust like some evil demon from an exorcist movie.

"The audacity of this bitch." Cybele snarled, "Let me out, and I'll gift you her head."

Mother Harlot laughed heartily.

"What the hell is your problem!?" Hitoshi yelled.

"I... I just..." Ibara sputtered as she lowered her arm, a few drops of water plopping on the floor, "I thought..."

Ren sighed, "Thought that I was the incarnation of evil because of Mother Harlot?"

Ibara pursed her lips.

“Yes, I have Mother Harlot as one of my companions,” He muttered as a chill came through the hallway, “But that’s not all I am. I have Cerberus and Cu Chulainn. Ishtar and Fafnir. Kohryu, Alice, and Vasuki. Odin and Cybele. I am not the sum of a single one of them, but the sum of all of them put together. Am I making myself clear?”

“I... I...” Ibara gaped like a fish, her eyes falling to the ground.

“Trickster, allow me to settle her inner turmoil.” Gabriel offered.

“Fine.”

Gabriel appeared between him and Ibara in a burst of blue flame. Ibara gasped and the small container fell from her grasp.

“An angel with a bundle of lilies...” Her eyes went impossibly wide, “Archangel Gabriel?”

“Yes, it is I.” Gabriel nodded serenely, “Allow me to clear the air between you and Joker, so that this grave misconduct never happens again.”

“Leave this girl to Gabriel.” Satanael said.

Ren walked around Gabriel and Hitoshi shoved the box in her arms with a scowl.

“Just so you know, those ‘news articles’ are all bullshit. Next time, why don’t you grow a brain and actually get to know a person first before you judge them.”

Ren couldn’t help the trickle of warm pride as Hitoshi walked onwards. He took one glance at Ren and led them down another hall and into a bathroom.

“What the hell is wrong with people.” Hitoshi muttered darkly as Ren took several paper towels and started to dry himself off.

“I’ll give her the benefit of the doubt.” Ren stated, “It’s not like we ever met in person for her to get to know me first. I doubt it’ll happen again.”

“It still doesn’t make it right, what she did.” Hitoshi said as he gave Ren a disbelieving look.

Ren couldn’t say anything before his phone chimed in his pocket.

[Rat Devil]

I saw what happened on the cameras.

I’ll be calling Ibara to my office.

[World-Hopping Trickster]

Don’t punish her.

It was just a mistake, that’s all.

[Rat Devil]

Hmm, very well. If that’s what you want.

I’ll give her a stern talking to and a warning, but nothing more.

Though I will have the staff firmly remind students that any attack on your character will result in immediate detention. I’ll not allow it to happen again.

Ren internally groaned as he put his phone away.

“What’s up?” Hitoshi asked.

“Nezu saw, but I asked him to be nice.” Ren threw the damp towels in the garbage, “Let’s get to Snipe before anything else happens.”

They reached their destination without another incident. Heavy duty lockers lined one wall, and the other half of the room was taken over by an impressive range.

Snipe was leaning at the counter, an unloaded gun and extra ammo clips already set out, “Nezu told me what happened. You two okay?”

“We’re fine.” Ren said.

Hitoshi nodded, “Can we get started?”

Snipe nodded after a moment. He pulled himself away from the counter and gestured to the gear on the counter.

“Both of you put in ear plugs first. Then you can show Joker what you got, Shinsou.”

They followed Snipe’s directions, and then Hitoshi expertly loaded the gun. Hitoshi took aim while Ren leaned against the wall behind him with a critical eye. Snipe chuckled as he went and pressed a red button on the wall.

A buzzer sounded, and human shaped paper targets appeared on the range.

Hitoshi wasted no time.

Bang. Bang! BANG!

A single gunshot went through each target that appeared, close to the center with a few hitting the bullseye. A screen above the counter showed the number of targets he hit. Ren held a hint of unadulterated pride when Hitoshi reloaded it nearly as fast as Ren would.

The targets stopped appearing when the buzzer sounded again after one minute.

Hitoshi unloaded the clip and set all of the equipment on the counter. He looked up to the screen and broke out into a wide smile.

“Congrats, Shinsou!” Snipe said as he threw his hands up, “That’s three more than your previous personal best!”

“41 targets in one minute?” Ren whistled, “That’s pretty impressive, Hitoshi.”

“Thanks. Wait a minute,” He blinked at Ren, “What’s your personal best? I’ve never seen you go all out.”

“Dunno. I’ve never been to a gun range before.”

He’d never tell them how he’d gotten his butt kicked by Shinya at the arcade countless times.

Snipe hummed, “Would you like to try it out?”

Ren nodded, “It can’t hurt.”

He walked up to the counter and picked up the gun. It was slightly heavier than what he was used to, and the lack of any power emanating from it felt wrong. He frowned at the dead piece of equipment, but reloaded it and nodded at Snipe.

The buzzer sounded, and Ren fired before the first target was fully visible. Targets appeared and disappeared in a flurry. The buzzer sounded too quickly. With a sigh he unloaded the gun and placed it on the counter.

Hitoshi and Snipe gawked at the number on the screen.

“A little more than one target per second.” Snipe said, “I’m impressed.”

“What’s your best, Snipe-sensei?” Hitoshi asked, “Does Joker have you beat?”

A sudden idea popped into Ren’s head. He grinned as he faced Snipe, “Why don’t we see who’s the better shot? Best two out of three rounds?”

Snipe’s hand went to his masked chin, “I’d hate for you to lose confidence when I beat you.”

“How about this,” Joker donned his costume with wisps of blue embers. He unsheathed the Nataraja and the Tyrant Pistol in either hand, feeling relief at the wells of power inside each, “Both of us at our best, no holds barred, and whoever wins gets to decide what kind of curry we’ll have for dinner tonight.”

Hitoshi glanced back and forth between Joker and Snipe, excitement plain on his expression.

“Alright. You’re on, partner.” Snipe grabbed two guns from his belt and held them up in the same position as Joker, “Shinsou, come stand by the button.”

“Sure.”

Joker went to one end of the range, Snipe on the other.

“Okay, Shinsou, see those dials on the settings next to the button?” Snipe said, “Turn rows 1 and 7 up to the hardest difficulty.”

Hitoshi nodded and did just that.

Joker and Snipe held their breath in anticipation as Hitoshi’s hand hovered over the red button. Hitoshi slammed his hand down, and the buzzer sounded for a third time.

Hitoshi's jaw dropped at the chorus of gunshots. The hardest difficulty set up multiple targets at once, but they all fell under the mastery these two had of their trusty weapons. The buzzer sounded, halting the deafening sounds of gunshots.

127 to 119 in Joker's favor.

Snipe squawked, "Were you holding back earlier?"

"I was using a dead weapon before, and a model I wasn't wholly familiar with at that." Joker said, twirling the Nataraja around his finger, "Plus we both have two guns now."

"... Dead weapon?" Snipe shook his head, "Well, I'm not going to hold back on Round 2, so you better be ready!"

"Wouldn't dream of holding back for the sake of your pride."

Snipe actually chuckled at that.

They reloaded their weapons before they returned to their stances. Hitoshi pressed the button. The buzzer didn't sound properly before the gunshots overwhelmed it.

Hitoshi watched in awe as the deadly duo put their all into it, going so far as to throw in fancy movements between rapid fire shots. He bit his lip as the targets were mercilessly slaughtered at near maximum capacity.

This time the score was 143 to 138 in Snipe's favor.

The both of them were nearly out of breath as their guns smoked.

"Not bad!" Joker said with a bright grin.

Snipe nodded, "I'm still full of surprises."

"Why don't we make our bet a little more interesting?"

“What do you have in mind?”

Joker’s grin turned devilish, “The winner gets to decide what kind of curry the other will eat for a whole week, on top of something else. It could be anything.”

“Okay. So, I’ll decide what kind of curry you’ll eat for a week and I get first dibs on you when you start your TA duties! You’ll be grading all the homework, by the way.”

Joker laughed, “Alright, if that’s how you want to play it. If I win, I decide what curry you’ll eat for the whole week and...” His smirk widened even more, “You have to put a glitter bomb in Aizawa’s room tonight.”

Snipe choked on air, “What!? I picked something relatively harmless! You want to kill me!”

“So you’re afraid you’re afraid of losing then?”

“No way, partner!” Snipe faced the range like a feral animal, “I’m going to tell my students that they have extra homework because of you! I hope you like grading essays!”

“Bring it on, hero! ”

Hitoshi was almost afraid to push the button again, but he was too excited to see the outcome to back out now. The buzzer sounded, and both of them went wild. Hitoshi couldn’t keep track of how many bullets whizzed through the range, and so many gunshots sounded that he’d be hearing them hours later despite having ear protection. Instead, he kept his eyes on the screens.

The numbers were neck and neck until Snipe called out one of his ultimate moves to put him in the lead. Sweat broke out on Joker’s brow as he realized he was falling behind, but he wouldn’t let that stop him. He still had an ace up his sleeve.

He hadn't used this move yet in this world, and he'd never tried it with two guns before either.

Joker was a blur as he jumped to the side, bullets flying out of his guns. He heard Hitoshi gasp as he leapt into a mid-air flip next, his Down Shot claiming the last of his ammo at break-neck speed.

Joker landed just as the buzzer sounded.

Both contestants panted as they stared up at the screens.

161 to 160....

In Joker's favor.

"I'm dead." Snipe whispered in the sudden and dizzying silence.

Snipe's phone chimed. He numbly put his guns on the counter and reached into his pockets for it. A high pitched whine escaped his throat.

"Nezu just texted me saying he'll write a eulogy for me."

Joker sheathed his guns and walked over, smiling as he held out his hand, "Good competition, Snipe. I had fun!"

Snipe glanced at his hand, then up at Joker's face, "Yeah, yeah. You won fair and square, Joker."

They shook once before they let go.

"Holy shit."

"Language, Shinsou." Snipe said half-heartily.

"Sorry." Hitoshi deadpanned, "That was one of the coolest things I've ever seen."

“Thanks,” Snipe said, “You’ll catch up in no time as long as you put in the work!”

Joker winked at Hitoshi, “I’ll teach you how to do that move sometime, too.”

“Sweeeet.”

“Oh, there’s two of them.” Snipe put a hand over his heart, “We’re all doomed.”

Joker and Hitoshi grinned at one another. An alarm went off, and Snipe sighed as he silenced his phone.

“Our time is up. It’s not how I expected to spend this training session, but I’m definitely not disappointed.” Snipe shivered, “And more than a little terrified.”

“My classmates will be wondering where I am, anyway.” Hitoshi stated.

“I’ll come with you to drop off Alice. She’s excited to meet everyone.” Joker said as he let his costume vanish.

“Before you go...” Snipe hesitated before he sighed, “I have to be honest, Amamiya. I invited you here to apologize for what happened at the USJ. I shouldn’t have done that to you.”

Ren smiled wistfully, “After Kamino, Mr. Compress taught me the value of the phrase ‘Ces’t la vie.’ I accept your apology, Snipe.”

Snipe deflated in relief, “That’s great! That was... easy. I can’t believe I was so worried over nothing!”

Ren patted Snipe on the shoulder as he started to walk out, “I’ll give you the glitter bomb at lunch. Don’t back out now.”

Snipe sputtered, and would spend a long time in the gun range wallowing in dread.

Hitoshi did the two finger salute at Snipe before following Ren out. He inevitably took the lead to show Ren to the 1-C classroom. They walked in silence for a long while, and Ren grew concerned at the contemplation on Hitoshi's face.

"What's on your mind?"

"Hmm? Oh." Hitoshi scratched the back of his neck, "It's just... seeing you and Snipe reminds me of how far behind I am compared to everyone else. I still have a long way to go."

"You can't compare yourself to Snipe. He's a pro hero who has years of experience."

Hitoshi raised a brow at him, "And you? You're only a little older than I am, but you're way better than most pro heroes combined."

"I was a beginner too, once, and it's not like I had to learn everything by myself," Ren replied, "You've come pretty far in just a few months, Hitoshi, and you'll go a lot farther if you keep up the good work."

"... Thanks, Ren." Hitoshi looked away to hide his red face, "That.... really means a lot. I've never shared my hero name with you, have I?"

"You haven't."

"I'll be the Jack-Of-All-Trades Hero: Wildcard."

Ren stopped in his tracks, staring at Hitoshi with a wide-eyed expression.

Hitoshi froze, "You know, s-since Aizawa-sensei is showing me how to use his capture weapon as well as hand to hand combat, my hacking skills have gotten a lot better, firearms too with Snipe. Mei's teaching me how to make all kinds of stuff... and I have your original knife in a locker, but nobody knows how to use one as good as you, so..."

Hitoshi's rambling trailed off as Ren continued to stare.

"I'll train you on how to use a dagger."

"Really?"

"I've heard Aizawa talk about your morning sessions before class. I'll join those sessions when I can." Ren smiled as he grasped Hitoshi's shoulder, "You're going to be an amazing hero, Hitoshi, I just know it."

Hitoshi looked at Ren as if he had just hung the Moon, both of their hearts basking in the cozy warmth of a brotherly bond deepened.

Ren smirked as he held out his fist, to which Hitoshi bumped with his own.

Hitoshi cleared his throat, "Right. So, my classroom is uh... this way."

They reached the classroom and Hitoshi opened the door, but it was dark inside. Ren didn't need Third Eye to sense someone stalking closer.

"Boo!"

Ren and Hitoshi deadpanned at a girl dressed like a zombie who had jumped out at them.

"Zombies don't say boo, Class Rep." Hitoshi deadpanned.

"Oh, dangit! Maybe I should try groaning or grumbling-" Her eyes landed on Ren, and she froze like a deer in the headlights, "Oh my GOSH!! It's Joker!!"

Several heads popped up out of the darkness, dressed in a variety of different halloween-esque costumes.

“Unfortunately, I can’t stay long,” Ren put on a charismatic smile, “I’m just here to drop off Alice. I have my own Festival preparations to make.”

Alice appeared next to Ren, and several cries of shock accompanied the familiar blue blaze in which she summoned herself.

Alice curtsied with an unsettling smirk, an aura of dread smothering the whole haunted house, “I’m here to play! Won’t you play with me, big sis?”

The zombie girl squealed, “SHE’S PERFECT!!”

Hitoshi sighed, “Better run while you can, Ren.”

Ren patted Alice’s head, “Be good and have fun.”

“I will, Big Brother!”

Ren walked away. He had just stepped outside when Gabriel finally returned to him, completely satisfied.

“What took you so long?” He asked.

“I set the girl straight.” Gabriel stated.

“Meaning?” Satanael urged.

“I escorted her to Nezu’s office as he wanted, and she no longer views you as the one who will destroy the world. She changed her mind rather quickly when I explained that the ‘demon’ who came down during Kamino was not Lucifer, but Satanael in his truest form. Nezu took over after that.”

“I... am not going to ask.” Ren stated, to which Gabriel gave him a smug smile in return.

He brushed those thoughts aside to focus on the many red and black tents that have popped up around the Festival Grounds. He had a lot of work to do.

...

Later that night, after Aizawa retired to his room, Nezu and Ren had made a huge bowl of popcorn and pushed a big plush chair in front of Aizawa's door.

"Uh... what are you two up to?" Shuichi asked, drawing the eyes of the rest of the staff and vigilante.

Except for Snipe, who had not shown his face for the rest of the day.

Ren had a mouthful of popcorn, so Nezu, sitting on the chair arm, answered jovially, "Watching the show!"

They had a moment of confusion before there was a booming pop coming from inside Aizawa's room. A shout of startled rage reached their ears before the door burst open, and Aizawa stepped out covered head to toe in red glitter. A shower of it spilled out of his room and into the common area.

Aizawa begrudgingly held his tongue when he spotted Eri sitting on a couch, instead giving Ren and Nezu a death glare. Ren just gave him a cheeky grin.

"It was Snipe!" Nezu stated mercilessly.

Aizawa stalked off to find his prey, leaving a trail of sparkling glitter in his wake. The others split up after that, and Hound Dog said in no way, shape, or form that they were just hiding from Aizawa for the rest of the night.

He and Nezu cackled as they finished off the popcorn.

It was a few hours later when Ren and Morgana saw something strange outside their balcony window. They found Snipe stuck high up in the private garden's ginko tree, wrapped up in Aizawa's capture weapon like a fly in a spider's cocoon.

Snipe saw Ren smirking under him, "I hate you."

"No you don't. I'm going to choose your favorite curry for the rest of the week as an apology."

Snipe sagged in his scarf prison, "Okay, I don't hate you. But this is your fault. Mind helping a guy out?"

Ren had enough decency to agree. It only took a swing of Gabriel's sword to cut Snipe down.

They didn't say anything when Snipe's feet touched the ground, sprinkles of glitter stuck to both of them as they called it a night.

~~ 2 Days Before The Festival ~~

"Are you nervous?" Nezu asked as he walked beside Ren the next morning, glitter-fest forgotten.

"A little." Ren said honestly. "But I'll be fine."

"I'll have your back!" Morgana nodded as he perched comfortably on Ren's shoulder.

They entered the hallway where the meeting room was located, but Ren blinked when he saw the pair of Arcana ahead: the Upright Justice and Upright Fortune.

Tsukauchi looked exhausted, with deep eye bags that would beat Hitoshi's any day. He looked as if he'd lost a little weight, his iconic detective's jacket hanging off of his shoulders.

Tsukauchi's eyes brightened when they landed on Ren, "Hey, kid. Long time no see."

"Joker!" Tensei's warm hug was unexpected, but not unwelcome as Ren hugged back. They parted and Tensei gave Morgana a good scratch behind the ears, "I'm so happy to see you guys again!"

"Likewise." Morgana said, satisfied.

"Nice to see you again, too." Ren frowned at the detective, "You look tired, Tsukauchi."

He waved off Ren's concern, "Work has been a nonstop grind since... since Kamino, but it's nothing I can't handle."

"I'll give you a little pick-me-up. This meeting won't exactly be... gentle."

Tensei nudged Tsukauchi, "I'm going to say yes for this poor man because he needs it. Joker's healing is like nothing else. I'd know from experience!"

Tsukauchi pouted, "I can handle myself just fine-"

Ren snapped his fingers. Ishtar sighed like a disappointed mother when the Salvation breathed new life into Tsukauchi, his general health improving by leaps and bounds.

Tsukauchi blinked in astonishment while Ren glared, "Ishtar wants you to take better care of yourself detective, otherwise she will come after you and I won't be able to stop her."

Tsukauchi's ears turned red, "My quirk is registering that as 'true', so... I'll try. Sansa has been on my case about it for months."

Tensei laughed, "This is proof that you should listen to him more often."

"... You're right."

Nezu cleared his throat, "Is everyone inside already?"

The pair sobered, and Tsukauchi nodded, "Yes, although everyone's wondering why we're having this meeting in Ground Beta."

Nezu grinned, "All will be explained. Come along now, our whole world could change if we waste any more time!"

Tsukauchi paled, "Why does my quirk say you're telling the truth?"

"Let's not keep everyone waiting." Ren said as he followed Nezu inside.

The room was bigger than he imagined, but despite its size the sheer number of pro heroes were squished around the long table.

He met Nighteye's severe gaze before anyone else's. The man scanned Ren from head to toe, but oddly enough his features softened. Weird. Maybe Mirio was right with Nighteye's change of heart.

"Joker!!" Miruko marched over and threw her arms around him, "Man I missed you so much!"

"Don't suffocate him." Gang Orca chuckled warmly as he ruffled Ren's hair, "But I'm glad to see you, too."

Ryukyu and Hawks smiled fondly as they joined the group. Best Jeanist too, his smile hidden by his collar.

The Councilors, Star, High Priestess, and strangely enough, Best Jeanist's Adjustment Arcanas shown brightly with their hearts. Ren smiled honestly as their support bolstered him.

"I hate to interrupt your reunion," Nighteye steepled his fingers, "But I'd like to know why we're having this meeting."

"Agreed." Vlad King said, "It doesn't paint a good picture of whatever we're going to have to do."

Nezu hopped onto the chair at the head of the table, “We’ll get started when everyone is seated.”

Gang Orca ruffled Ren’s hair one more time before he and the others went back to their chairs. Ren took the open seat between Aizawa and Mr. Compress, the latter planted a firm hand on his shoulder in support.

Tsukauchi and Tensei claimed the last remaining seats.

Nezu placed his interlaced paws on the table with a grave seriousness, “Before we get started, there’s something I want everyone to understand. We must have the cooperation of every single person here, as any discordance may lead to the destruction of our entire world.”

“Way to start off easy, Devil.” Satanael said.

A thick silence drowned the whole room as faces drained of blood. Only the vigilantes traded determined looks between one another.

Tsukauchi pursed his lips, “He’s telling the truth.”

“What!?” Present Mic grasped his head with both hands, “Nezu, what the heck did you get us into this time!?”

Well, if Nezu wasn’t sugar coating things, then Ren wouldn’t either.

“Nezu didn’t get you into this mess, I did.”

Ren suddenly stood up, all chatter ceased when he donned his costume with a flash of bright cerulean. His footsteps were extraordinarily loud as everyone watched him walk around the table to stand beside Nezu’s chair.

Morgana, still perched on Joker’s shoulder, held his head high and stared the heroes down.

“First and foremost, this meeting is about how you’ll guard the USJ on the day of the Festival.”

“... Guard?” Hawks raised a brow, “From what?”

“What else?” Nezu stated coolly, “From intruders, of course.”

“Intruders ?” Aizawa sat ram-rod straight, “You’re implying that there will be an attack during the Cultural Festival?”

“Quite so.”

“Why aren’t you canceling it?” Nighteye straightened his glasses, “You’re putting the lives of students and innocent civilians at risk!”

Nezu fearlessly met Nighteye’s gaze, “Because, whether you like it or not, an attack is inevitable regardless of the timing. These intruders are the cause of the ‘Red Rain’ that fell over U.A. recently.”

Several teachers stiffened, eyes blown wide in disbelief.

“Explain, Nezu.” Midnight leaned forward, her demeanor as smart as the crack of a whip, “If you knew about this, then why weren’t we informed before now?”

Nezu reached into his pocket for his phone. With the taps of a few keys, every phone in the room went off. Joker retrieved his from his pocket, as did everyone, to see pictures of a certain graph.

“These are the strange readings from the USJ I’ve gathered since the League’s attack.” Nezu said, “I didn’t know what was causing them for a long time, the facility itself seemed to show no change or evidence of anything heinous. However, with a recent investigation, I’ve discovered the unlikely source.”

“The USJ...” Thirteen’s eyes widened, “You went in there alone with Joker and the other vigilantes.”

“Indeed. Canceling the Cultural Festival gives the enemy the advantage, which would only doom us going forward.” Nezu glanced at Joker, “We must take the initiative in order to prevent a world-wide disaster. The Cultural Festival will only be the first step in gaining the upper hand.”

The heroes traded a variety of glances, ranging from unease to disbelief. A few stared at Joker with confusion or concern.

“You say this attack is completely unavoidable,” Tsukauchi said uneasily, “But you haven’t explained who this threat is or where they come from. Do you have confirmation that a new villain group will attack the school? And why at the USJ and not the school entrance or festival grounds?”

“These aren’t villains. Hell, they’re not even human .” Joker stated, his hammering heart only eased by a brush of Satanael's wings against his mind, “They’ll come through a tear in reality that cannot be seen by the naked eye.”

The heroes turned to look at Tsukauchi in an awkward silence.

Joker kept eye contact with the detective, putting his faith in the Upright Justice to have his back.

Tsukauchi swallowed, “... Truth.”

“Mr. Compress,” Nezu turned to the vigilante, “The files, if you will?”

Mr. Compress tipped his hat. He grabbed a handful of marbles from his coat pocket and snapped, revealing a large pile of folders. He slid one to each hero. Inside lay a photocopy of Joker’s rough sketch of the angelic Shadows in the Qlipoth World.

Joker was no Yusuke, but he got the likeness well enough after a couple of tries.

Ryukyu's brow furrowed at the word on the top of the page, "Shadows?"

"Why do they look like freaky angels?" Miruko asked. "And we have to rip off their faces!? That sounds badass!"

"Wait, it says here that... that our quirks and normal attacks might be useless!?" Snipe looked up from his file, "How in the world do you expect us to fight them?"

"Calm down." Morgana leapt from Joker's shoulder and, with an agile flip, turned into his Metaverse Form. He nimbly landed in the middle of the table, "Just because certain quirks and regular attacks won't work, doesn't mean they're invincible or you'll be helpless! These are enemies that Joker and I have fought countless times before. As long as you listen to us there shouldn't be any problems!"

Mona unsheathed his shining jewel-encrusted scimitar and raised it into the air. It gleamed dramatically in the light.

"Normally, you'd need powers like Joker and I have, but we found a work around. You may not have Personas, but you'll have special arms in place of them!"

Everyone stared at him as he continued to pose.

Mona glared at Mr. Compress, "That was your cue!"

"Apologies," Mr. Compress stated as he dug through his pockets once more, "But you looked so adorable like that."

"Now's not the time for messing around!" Mona cried.

Mr. Compress rolled several marbles on the table, and everyone jumped back when he snapped his fingers and trunks full of mythical weapons and armor appeared. Several got to their feet to peer into them.

Power Loader whipped around to Nezu, “That’s why you needed all that extra storage space in my lab? For all of this... stuff?”

“Indeed!” Nezu stated.

“They look fancy,” Midnight’s eyes widened when she spotted the Dainaraka Whip, “But what makes these weapons any different than our support gear?”

“Take that whip and find out, Midnight.” Joker said with a subtle smirk.

She did, and her reaction was instant. Midnight gasped and dropped it, the weapon clattering loudly on the table.

“Midnight, what’s wrong?” Aizawa asked.

“I... It’s...” Midnight’s hands trembled as she picked it up again, glancing up and down the length of the glowing whip with a brow hardened in concentration, “This weapon... it almost feels as if I’m holding something that’s alive .”

“A ‘dead weapon’...” Snipe glanced at Joker before he reached into one of the trunks and touched the Megido Blaster. He shivered as he retracted it, “Is that what you meant yesterday, Joker?”

Joker nodded.

Other heroes traded uneasy glances, but took the weapons Mona handed out.

Tsukauchi held Judge of the Dead in one hand, pupils like pinpricks, “Th-this is...”

“Awesome! I feel so much more powerful just holding these things!” Miruko clenched her fists as she wore the Gordios from Cybele, the platinum blades on the knuckles singing as she threw a few practice punches through the air, “Is this how you feel all the time, Joker!?”

Joker smirked, "Pretty much."

"Don't forget about the armor!" Mona said as he held up the first Black Winged Robe, "These are just as important!"

Gang Orca set Mjolnir on the table and accepted it from Mona, frowning deeply, "How will these help? They don't look like effective armor..."

"What happened when you suffered a punch from one of the Nomu in Jakku, Gang Orca?" Nezu asked.

Gang Orca blinked, and looked down to the scarring on his arm, "My arm and shoulder bones nearly shattered to dust. It's any wonder that I didn't lose them in that battle. If Recovery Girl wasn't there..."

Joker's eyes widened in horror, but Nezu continued.

"And what happened to Spinner when he was punched by that very same Nomu?"

Spinner flinched as he became the center of attention, "I got a few bruises and cracked scales, but that's it!" He thumped his chest with a fist, "That's because Joker gave me some pretty sweet armor ages ago!"

"These robes are slightly weaker than what Spinner and the others have," Mona said, "But they'll still provide a good amount of protection regardless. You shouldn't be hampered by wearing them under your hero costumes either."

"The armor does fit rather nicely, no matter your body shape." Gentle Criminal said with a nod, "They've saved our hides several times in the past."

"Especially during the Summer Camp!" Spinner added.

"Merp!" Lady Stubbs trumpeted from Spinner's shoulder.

“I want everyone to put them on and replace your current weapons with the ones Mona gave you,” Joker said, “Then meet us outside.”

“... Why?” Vlad King asked, although he seemed to regret it.

“There’s one more thing we need to hammer out. Specifically, accessories and other items I’ve made.” Joker unlatched the Crystal Skull hanging from his belt and held it up. It struck a deep, frigid chill into any who looked into its hollow eyes, “They’re a completely different ball game. You’ll see why when we do the demonstration outside.”

“Is this why we’re in Ground Beta, rather than in the school proper? For training ?” Cementoss asked.

Joker nodded once more.

Nezu waved the heroes off, “We’ll be waiting in the front of the building! There are designated changing rooms just down the hall, enough for each one of you. Don’t take too long!”

Joker, Mona, Nezu, and the other vigilantes left the other adults drowning in questions. Thankfully, they adjusted their new equipment within a few minutes and filed outside to ogle at Satanael hovering ominously over the road. Mr. Compress had set down the last trunk by Joker’s feet.

“You were right.” Ryukyu said as she stared down the front of her costume, “You can’t even tell that there’s another robe underneath.”

“Right!?” Miruko hopped between her feet, “I didn’t think anything like this was possible!”

“I don’t even feel the weight at all.” Hawks muttered.

“It shouldn’t be impossible.” Best Jeanist said as he ran his fingers down his sleeve, almost reverently, “Something like this could be groundbreaking.”

“Let’s not get too far ahead of ourselves.” Aizawa gravely warned.

Joker idly wondered if this is how the teachers felt when facing their students. He thought of Kawakami as the role reversal settled oddly in Joker’s chest, looking at Gentle Criminal and the closeness of the Temperance Arcana, but he pushed it down as he plucked a white ribbon out of the accessory trunk. Alice smirked within the mindscape as he glanced over the teachers, who stared back in trepidation.

“Midnight, would you step forward?” Joker asked.

She bravely went to his side. Nezu and the other vigilantes stood aside, just leaving her, Joker, and Satanael in the street.

He held out the long white ribbon waving beautifully in the breeze.

She swallowed as she took it, another round of shivers coursing through her body at its dark power.

“... What is this?” Midnight said as she clenched the ribbon, “I feel.... there’s some sort of energy in this...”

“It’s magic.” Joker smiled when she gaped at him, and he waved his arm towards Satanael, “I want you to use the magic in that ribbon to attack Satanael.”

“What!? But I-” She frantically shook her head and held out the ribbon to him, “I can’t hurt him!”

“You don’t need to worry, Miss Midnight.” Satanael’s voice carried down the whole street, “I am immune to the magic in that ribbon. You will not hurt me. This is solely for your benefit.”

She pursed her lips and studied Joker, who gave her an encouraging nod, “Okay.” She gently wrapped the ribbon around her hand, “How do I use it?”

“Magic is instinctual for Joker and I by now.” Mona said as he crossed his arms.

“It’s rather simple.” Mr. Compress took the diamond lily out of his coat pocket and held it up, frost accumulating around him, “Feel that energy within you, Midnight, and channel it as if you were about to activate your quirk.”

He brushed his fingers against the closest surface, small spears of ice encasing the side of the building.

“Indeed,” Gentle Criminal smiled encouragingly as the heroes openly gaped at the sparkling ice, “That’s also how I envisioned using the magic, too.”

“It’s a bit different for me, having a mutant quirk,” Spinner said as he tapped his new Brave Belt at his waist, “But having a physical power over a magical one works a lot better for me.”

“My quirk...” Midnight focused on the ribbon as she held it up, then looked at Satanael.

A black, scraggly tree and several ancient graves rose up around Satanael. Heroes gasped as a blood red moon hovered over the Persona, and without a moment more a giant scythe rose out of the ground and swung its blade across Satanael’s body.

If he were a normal human, that scythe would have split him cleanly in half.

The terrifying scenery faded as if it were never there. The heroes were dead silent, and Midnight stood frozen, bone white as she gaped at Satanael. The Persona tilted his head with a smirk, completely unharmed.

“Each Shadow could have any number of strengths and weaknesses to them; Physical and gun attacks from your new gear, along with fire, ice, electricity, wind, nuclear, psy, bless, and curse. Striking a Shadow's weakness is the key to winning." Joker announced when six more Personas appeared in writhing twisters of blue flame. He tempered his soul so as not to tremble under the weight of holding seven Personas, "Your goal for today is to practice with these new abilities. Any questions?"

Present Mic stared at Nezu, "Are you sure you shouldn't give Joker his own class? He's a great teacher!"

Aizawa punched Mic in the ribs, the man wheezed as he rubbed the spot.

"Where did you get all of this?" Thirteen raised their hand like a dutiful student, "It's not like anything we've ever heard of before, near sentient equipment that gives out Quirks..."

"Not Quirks. Magic. Every piece is made from the bodies of my Personas. In essence, each weapon, armor, or accessory you hold was a piece of my soul, once. It's why these arms 'feel alive', and are the only way for you to fight Shadows without a Persona."

A wave of alarm pervaded Ground Beta.

"I have one question." Nighteye was the first to regain his wits, "You say that you and Mona have some history and even battle experience from these... Shadows. What is your relation to them, and why won't you give us the full explanation right now?"

Joker sighed, "All of you need to witness what the Shadows are and where they come from first."

Nighteye was about to protest, but Joker cut him off.

"I promise that after the Cultural Festival, I'll tell you everything. " Joker's eyes hardened as golden fire flooded them, his Personas rallying in support with snarls and growls, a flood of power soaking Ground Beta. He stared at Tsukauchi, the detective matching his gaze, "Where Mona and I came from, our past and why we appeared at the USJ, what these Shadows are and who they work for. No detail will be spared, but it's imperative that you face these Shadows yourself before you can comprehend the full truth of our situation."

"Once again, he's telling the truth." Tsukauchi said gravely, "He hasn't lied once."

"Okay." Ectoplasm stepped up, but there was already a knowing gleam in his ghostly white eyes. It's likely that the name 'The God Of Control, Yaldabaoth' never left his mind since Joker's talk with Bakugo, "I'll follow your lead, Joker. I promised I'd help you out whenever I am able. I will not back down now."

"Me too!" Present Mic threw up his hands, "Let's get this show on the road, Listeners!"

Joker would be lying if he said he didn't feel some relief as the other heroes came around. No other questions were asked.

"Before you continue," Nezu piped up, "There aren't enough Personas for everyone to practice at once! Wouldn't you like to show off your assistants, Joker?"

"I'll help too!" Mona cried as he summoned Mercurius at his side.

"Very well." Joker smirked, ironically sending another shiver down the heroes' spines, "Since you asked..."

He figured he'd blown their minds so much within the past hour to where the appearance of the Velvet Room Door and the Attendants made them gape, unable to form words as the last frayed strings of their sanity were being mercilessly pulled. A few of them like Aizawa, Nighteye, and Joker's squad were already familiar of course, but Joker could hear the others' internal screaming from here. Present Mic jabbed a finger at Lavenza, a screeching whine locked in his throat as he and the remaining staff recognized her.

Joker sharply clapped his hands to snap them out of it, “Once you get your accessory and bundle of practice items, I’ll assign you to either one of the Personas, Mona, or an Attendant. We’ll be here for the rest of the day and most of tomorrow, so I don’t want to see anybody slacking off! If you have any questions about using your new gear or items, then please ask me or any of my teammates for help.”

“Oh my god it’s really like being in school all over again...” Miruko said with dread.

Hawks’ wings shuddered, “So this is what a real heroics class feels like? Damn...”

“Joker is going to make a terrifying TA.” Vlad King muttered.

“I can’t wait to scare my students.” Aizawa stated as a cheshire grin crept across his face.

“Aizawa!” Present Mic cried, “Don’t scar the poor kids for life!!”

Joker smiled in such a devilish way that it would put even Nezu’s deviousness to shame, “Let’s get started.”

Nezu’s toothy grin stretched from ear to ear as the adults were put under Joker’s strict tutelage.

~~ The Night Before The Festival ~~

Ren spotted a familiar arrangement of seven sparkling diamonds overhead.

The school was far enough away to escape a majority of the light pollution in Musutafu, so it was a small blessing to see them from the roof of the teacher’s dorm.

The past two days had been such a weird experience, between training grown adults how to use Persona gear and finalizing the security details with them, to putting down the very last touches to his own Festival routines. His original phone had been repaired and waited in the Velvet Room.

Everything was in place.

Everyone was armed and ready to take on Shadows.

And yet, he couldn't help his roiling stomach. Their first step to finally finding a way home was hours away, and his mind drifted to all of the worst possible scenarios: Heroes getting slaughtered, Shadows not appearing and making him look like an insane liar, Shadows escaping the USJ to attack the Festival grounds, Yaldabaoth himself tearing open the rift and consuming this world.

... Him being powerless to stop it again.

Morgana was beside him in a comfortable silence. They sat in gentle solitude for a while, just absorbing the other's companionship. At least, until they heard footsteps.

Ren looked over his shoulder, "Oh, Yagi-san."

The man smiled sheepishly, "I hope I'm not interrupting?"

"Not at all." Ren gestured next to him.

Yagi took the offered spot, staring up at the stars. "I've always lived in big cities, so I've never seen many stars."

Ren chuckled, "You should really get out in the country. Especially up in the mountains, the stars are really beautiful there."

"I didn't know you enjoyed the stars so much."

Ren idly pet Morgana, "They were a source of comfort back home."

“Ah...” Yagi frowned, “Your home-”

Ren’s hand stilled over Morgana, the not-cat also tensing-

Yagi looked Ren in the eye, his cerulean gaze sharp, “It’s very far away, isn’t it?”

“... Something like that.”

“I’ll be honest, young Amamiya, I didn’t know what to think when All For One said you weren’t of this world.” Yagi stared up at the stars, “Nezu figured it out right away, of course. But evidence stating otherwise keeps piling up. Your and Mona’s unique powers, the Red Rain, some sort of tear in reality at the USJ, enemies that can’t be touched by quirks or normal support gear. You yourself turned pieces of your very soul into equipment for others to use.”

Morgana’s fur bristled while Ren and his Personas hung off of Yagi’s words.

“Is your home in trouble?” The man asked quietly, “Is that why these Shadows are such a threat?”

Ren opened and closed his mouth, but the words died in his throat.

“Yes.” Morgana answered with a sudden swell of bravado, “The leader of the Shadows rules over our home. He... he separated us from our friends and trapped us here. We don’t know if anyone we love is even still alive, either under the Holy Grail’s tyranny or in the other places our friends are trapped.”

Horror laced Yagi’s expression.

Ren expected the worst. He waited for Yagi to turn on them or call them insane, maybe summon the other teachers to lock them up in an insane asylum far from U.A.

But then Yagi did something unexpected. He pulled his legs from the side of the building, faced Ren and Morgana as he sat on his knees, and bowed deeply in the dogeza position.

Ren inhaled sharply, “Yagi-san, what are you doing?”

“Please accept my deepest apologies and my greatest thanks.” Yagi stated fervently.

Ren’s hands hovered over the man’s shoulders, “You really don’t need to do this...”

“Yes, I do. Please, let me continue.”

Ren was struck speechless, as was Morgana.

“You ended a centuries long feud with my arch nemesis, healed me to where I could enjoy life again, protected my students and civilians from all sorts of villains... and you’ve done so while not only suffering greatly in silence, but while also being at the mercy of constant hero and police onslaught. Myself included.”

Yagi bowed deeper, his forehead digging into the gravel.

“Whatever we need to do to make things right, whatever I need to do to help you defeat your nemesis and find your friends and home again... I’ll gladly do it. It’s the very least I could do to repay you both for how much you’ve given my home and those I love.”

Silence became their fourth companion.

Ren and Morgana absorbed the man’s honest words. The Judgement Arcana expunged the fear and doubt he held just minutes ago. Strength and new power born from Yagi’s oath empowered Ren as the Judgement’s light radiated within his soul like a burning sun.

“Please lift your head.” Ren said, willing his voice not to tremble.

Yagi did so, staring at Ren and Morgana in anticipation.

“I... I don’t know what to say.” Ren rubbed the back of his neck, “It means the world that you believe in us in the first place. Thank you.”

Morgana nodded, eyes brightening, “The more friends we have, the easier this whole ordeal will be.” Morgana bowed his head to Yagi, “I’ll also thank you for believing in us and offering to help.”

“So...?”

Ren held out his hand, “Let’s fight together, Yagi-san. We’ll be counting on you!”

Yagi grinned as he sat up and firmly shook Ren’s hand.

The three of them stayed on the roof for a long while, looking at the stars.

I did a video of Mother Harlot, Cybele, and Odin's builds for DTESH! Its an unlisted video as to not spoil other people watching earlier videos, so I'll share it here as well as update chapter 9 of the Thieves Den!

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=MsA4DpjnZrw&ab_channel=BukuBuku

Also, the Adjustment arcana for Best Jeanist is the Thoth version of Justice.

Voracious Waltz

Chapter 90: Voracious Waltz

“N-no, it’s not that! But I... It’s just...”

“You can tell me.” Ren urged gently.

Midoriya’s grip tightened on the plastic bag holding the rope, “I... know.”

(See the end of the chapter for notes.)

Plates and mugs clinked in the otherwise silent kitchen. Although heavenly aromas attracted early risers, those who came for breakfast felt their blood freeze with horror and fascination.

Their chef this morning was Ren’s newest Persona - The darkest void giving shape to a half man, half writhing mass of tentacles tipped with neon blue claws. Their hypnotic dance pulled seductively at the mind and made it hard to tear their eyes away. The Unspeakable One floated around as if the concept of gravity didn’t apply to him like the rest of these mere mortals.

“Thanks, Hastur.” Ren smiled as a black tendril slid the first plate of steaming omurice to him.

‘My pleasure, Trickster.’

Hastur didn’t have a mouth to speak in the traditional sense, so Hastur’s voice crawled within the dark spaces of their minds, the ineffable imitation of several voices woven together in shadow. Many of the heroes paled, others clutched their temples at the strangeness of it.

Hawks drummed his fingers on the kitchen island, “You know, when you offered to make us breakfast on our big day, I never expected-”

A plate of crispy waffles topped with fried chicken and maple syrup was set gingerly under his nose.

The hero swallowed as the delectable scents hit him, “... This.”

Hastur swept up several plates per tentacle next and floated away to deliver them, looking more like the heart of a black hole slicing through space and time.

“I’m surprised you have a new one, considering the timing.” Ryukyu grimaced when Hastur placed her plate and a cup of coffee in front of her. She stared into them as if they contained some unspeakable monstrosity within.

“Wouldn’t you have to redo your Festival Routine?” Best Jeanist asked when his breakfast was set down next.

‘We art thou, thou art us.’ Hastur’s voice slithered around their gray matter, ‘I already know everything, and more besides.’

“He has his own part in the performance.” Ren nodded, “And he’s easier to see from the stands than Pixie, too.”

“Oh, he certainly attracts attention...” Miruko muttered.

Morgana chuckled from his chair beside Eri, he and Lady Stubbs sharing plates of fatty tuna courtesy of Hawks, “Our Leader did this a lot in the past.”

Spinner shivered, “What, make new Personas in a pinch?”

“Pretty much.”

“Once I got a whole new stock right before we fought a powerful Shadow ruling over a casino.” Ren shook his head as the room became tense, “Let’s just say Ishtar and the others really saved our bacon during that fight.”

Tsukauchi sat in silence, lips pursed so hard they turned white.

“Right...” Hawks murmured.

Present Mic walked into the room, yawning. He froze mid-yawn, took one bug-eyed look at Hastur and turned right around. Other teachers filed in after, equally unsettled as Ren urged them to take a seat.

Hastur finished the next plate by then; several apple carvings of lotus flowers so beautiful they were a masterwork of art. Panic creased the heroes’ faces when the Great Old One hovered over Eri.

Her eyes sparkled at the plate, her gaze trailing up to Hastur’s wriggling mass, “Thank you, Hastur!”

Hastur patted her head and returned to continue cooking.

“I gotta say...” Spinner said, “Does anyone feel something weird with that one?”

“What, as if he’s not weird enough?” Ryukyu asked.

“No, something... different.”

“What do you mean?” Ren asked.

“I dunno! I just...” Spinner squinted as the Persona worked at several sizzling or boiling pots and pans, “Something about him just draws me in for some reason.”

“Maybe because he’s an Apostle Persona.” Ren suggested.

“Oh?” Spinner sat up in his chair, “Have there been any others?”

“Lavenza said there are only two spots for Apostle in the Compendium. Hastur took one, and Byakhee the other.”

“Is the other one as weird as Hastur?” Hawks asked.

Ren chuckled, “He’s a humanoid demon wasp with bat wings, if that’s what you’re asking.”

Mr. Compress patted Spinner’s shoulder, “Figures your Arcana would get the more... distinguished looking ones.”

“What’s that supposed to mean!? Which Personas are the Faith Arcana!?”

“Cu Chulainn is both Faith and Star.” Ren said.

Hawks perked up at that.

“See?” Mr. Compress said with a smirk, “Cu Chulainn is a rather handsome Persona.”

“Why I outta-”

“Boys,” La Brava rolled her eyes, “Stop arguing.”

“It’s not arguing!” Mr. Compress wagged a finger at her, “Just some light teasing to lighten this dreary atmosphere! I mean no harm by it.”

Spinner rolled his eyes and jabbed at his rice with his chopsticks.

Lady Stubbs slurped up her last piece of tuna, turning her giant lamp-like eyes to scathe Mr. Compress. The man gulped and scooted away from her for his own safety. Spinner smirked and scratched her behind her ears.

Ren shook his head and scooped up the first bite of his breakfast. He paused when he didn’t hear any other silverware. He looked around, and most eyes were on him, the gourmet-levels of food untouched by the heroes.

Kaito noticed too, “Is there something wrong with your food?”

“There shouldn’t be.” Ren said as he devoured his first bite. The spices and textures worked wonders for the exquisite flavor.

The heroes exchanged glances, but one by one they tucked in.

Miruko slammed her fist on the table, “Holy shit, these pancakes are next level!! Hey, Bird Brain! I bet mine are better than yours!”

Hawks whirled around to her, crumbs on his lips, “I doubt it. Waffles are, and always will be, superior ! Topped with this amazing fried chicken and maple syrup, it can’t be beat!”

Ryukyu face-palmed over her sirloin steak, a strange breakfast choice, but maybe it had to do with her being part dragon, “Not this argument again.”

“Always the same song and dance.” Gang Orca muttered over his platters of fried fish, “Why don’t you two call a truce?”

“No way!” Hawks and Miruko shouted in unison.

Best Jeanist sighed, “Adult heroes who act like children...”

“I think it’s endearing.” Cementoss said as he nursed a cup of coffee, “Such playful spirits are rare in this day and age.”

“We could certainly use more light-hearted heroes.” Ectoplasm agreed.

A few more teachers trickled in, but it was easier to convince them to eat a meal made a Great Old One when their coworkers inhaled their food. A few were still missing, but two in particular had yet to show their faces.

“Has anyone seen Tensei?” Ren asked after he finished eating, “Or Nighteye?”

Hawks shrugged, “Tensei left before anyone else was up. Nighteye went to pick up Mirio.”

Ren frowned. "Ah."

Mirio would escort Kaito and Eri around the Festival, but Tensei suddenly leaving made him confused.

He put his spoon down and his plate was scooped up by one of Hastur's sinuous limbs, "Something troubles you?" Hastur's eternal voice asked from the mindscape.

"It's nothing."

"Don't worry Trickster." Ishtar stated. "I have faith in Tensei."

"He wouldn't run off on us, especially with the Persona gear."
Satanael said, "The Upright Fortune is better than that."

Ren felt a brush on his shoulder, and looked to see Aizawa at his side.

"Come with me."

"Do you want a cup of coffee first?"

Aizawa blinked at Hastur's dark mass, "... I'll wait."

Ren nodded and glanced at Morgana, "Stay with Eri?"

"Sure thing, Leader!" Morgana chirped over his tuna.

Aizawa led him from the common area and into the entry way.

"What's up?"

"One of my students needs to buy something last minute for their concert." Aizawa leveled him with a careful look, "I was wondering if you would go along with them."

Ren frowned. He reached into his pocket for his phone. Nezu had turned his USJ readings into an app so they could keep tabs on its progress. The current readings were already a bit higher than they were last night.

“The store is only fifteen minutes away.” Aizawa said as he sensed Ren’s hesitance, “You’d both be back before the gates open for the public. Besides, you haven’t left U.A. once since you got here about a month ago, some fresh air would do you good before... whatever happens at the USJ.”

“And you already got Nezu’s permission?”

Aizawa nodded, “He encouraged it, actually.”

“Okay.” He said as he put his phone back, “Who’s the student?”

“Midoriya.”

“Oh.”

Aizawa sighed, “There’s another reason I’m asking. Do you think you can work out whatever it is that’s bothering Midoriya? He’s been acting off since the Overhaul Raid, but he hasn’t said a word to me and when I do ask he says he’s fine. It’s okay for you to say no, I’ll figure something else out if that’s the case.”

Ren gave him a reassuring smile, “I’ve been wanting to talk with him for a while.”

“Thank you.” Aizawa nodded. “Here, you’ll need this to let yourself back in the school.”

Ren blinked.

In Aizawa’s hand was Ren’s official U.A. Teacher’s Assistant ID, it had his photo, real name, and alias as Joker. Ren forgot about the ten minutes they spent taking the pictures for these weeks ago. Ren took it in both hands, but something else brushed against his fingers on the back.

He stared in astonishment at the familiar wad of 5,000 yen. Some of the bills were crumpled from being in the clip for so long, but it was obvious they were well cared for.

Ren looked up at Aizawa, shocked, “You kept it this entire time?”

Aizawa shrugged, a small smile hidden under his scarf, “I almost didn’t after Kamino, but Tsukauchi convinced me to keep it just in case. Get yourself something while you’re out.”

This time, Ren accepted it with a genuine smile, “... Thanks, Eraser.”

“Don’t mention it. Midoriya should be waiting for you at the school’s back entrance.”

Ren smirked as Aizawa turned towards the kitchen, “Make sure to get some coffee, Eraser. Hastur made plenty for everyone!”

Aizawa grumbled as Ren walked outside, tucking his new ID and the bills safely in his pocket.

It was a crisp morning, the sky a pleasing shade of blue that spoke of fair weather. Students rushed past the dorms to make their final preparations, hardly giving him a second glance as he stood in the teacher’s yard.

“Hmm, if the students are already out and about then why don’t we do the same?” Satanael said, “It would be good to make our own final checks before civilians pour into the school.”

“We’ll do it while you’re away, Trickster.” Vasuki whispered, “To save time.”

Technically, nobody said he couldn’t...

So he released the Personas.

Kohryu and Gabriel shot off into the sky. Vasuki, Black Frost, and Alice scampered in difference directions, students jumping out of their path. Cybele followed, kicking off into the air with a burst of wind.

Fafnir appeared next, bowing low as his claws kneaded the grass, “May I go to the Strength?”

Ren nodded, and the dragon bounded off with a flash of silver scales.

Hastur returned to him seconds later, cooking duties done. Still, even with seven Personas active, the strain wasn’t as bad as before. Perhaps training the heroes and deepening the Judgement Arcana strengthened his soul more than he thought.

He held out his arm, and Yatagarasu appeared. The strain increased, but not by much.

“Can you keep watch while Midoriya and I are out?” Ren asked.

“Ah, just like old times.” Yatagarasu shuffled his feathers, “Leave it to me!”

Yatagarasu launched into the sky, the forever faithful shadow at Ren’s back. Ren took another deep breath as eight parts of his soul wandered around the school, settling like the foundations of a new log cabin. Yeah, he could handle it.

It took him a few minutes to reach the school’s back gate, and waiting for him was Midoriya.

He looked up when Ren approached, stiffening.

“Hey.” Ren said, wearing his best smile, “Aizawa said you needed to get something for your class?”

“Y-yes! Just some rope, the last one snapped while we were practicing...” They stared at one another as silence stretched between them.

Ren smirked, “I don’t know where this store is, so you’ll have to lead the way.”

“Oh, r-right!”

Midoriya walked out of the school’s gate first. Ren followed, but stopped in the middle of the sidewalk. A persistent fog cleared from his mind and the constant ringing in his soul went silent. He had gotten so used to it that the sudden lack of it almost made him dizzy.

“Are you okay, Amamiya?”

Ren winced, “Yeah. It just feels weird to be out of U.A. now.”

Midoriya reciprocated a shaky smile, and they continued in silence. Thankfully, the streets were empty, but that worsened the quiet atmosphere between them. Midoriya kept watching Ren from the corner of his eye. Ren thought this would be like the talk with Bakugo, so he allowed Midoriya to gather his thoughts to be the one to breach the unnatural awkwardness. But as the minutes strolled by and the store came into view, neither of them spoke a word.

They went inside and were out within minutes with the bundle of rope. It looked as if there would be nothing but more silence on the whole journey back, so Ren made the decision.

Ren stopped on the sidewalk, “Midoriya.”

Midoriya flinched, “Y-yes?”

“You haven’t spoken since we left the school and you won’t even look at me. What’s wrong?” Ren said, not unkindly as Midoriya paled, “Was it what happened at the Overhaul Raid?”

“N-no, it’s not that! But I... It’s just...”

“You can tell me.” Ren urged gently.

Midoriya's grip tightened on the plastic bag holding the rope, "I... know."

"Know what?"

"That you... you're..." Midoriya's bright green eyes stared into Ren's soul, "That you're actually Quirkless. That... that you don't even have a Quirk Factor."

Ren's eyes widened, "Where did you hear that?"

"I-I... overheard it by accident."

"I see." Ren crossed his arms, "What do you intend to do with this information?"

"Nothing! I wasn't going to tell anybody, I swear!" He threw up his arms, but they fell to his sides in dismay. "But... I just want to know how . How do you have such awesome powers when you don't even have a Quirk Factor?"

Judging by the way Midoriya's fists shook, it'd been eating at him for a while. It's not as though Ren could spill everything freely, however... something about Midoriya himself had been bothering Ren for some time.

"How about an exchange?" Ren said after a solid minute of silence.

"What?"

The gold in Ren's eyes glimmered like liquid drops of sunlight. "I think it's only fair, trading one secret for another." He activated Third Eye, the rainbow of colors surged around Midoriya and the Chariot card over his head, "You want my secret, but in exchange you'll tell me why you have the fragments of eight other souls attached to yours."

Midoriya gasped. The colors around Midoriya's soul undulated and took the vague shape of several people, their eyes staring wide in shock. The golden one looked so familiar.

Satanael's presence flooded Ren's soul, the other Personas back at U.A. wincing. The other souls stood firm in the wake of Satanael's power, none bowing to the other until both nodded in equal respect.

"You..." Midoriya gaped as he seemed to feel the change in the souls, "You can see them?"

"Yes, when you did the final attack on Overhaul, but I can tell they've been with you a lot longer than that. They're too intertwined with you to be a fresh connection." Ren looked around as Third Eye faded. There was a quaint little tea shop next to the store, but there might be people there. Instead, he turned towards an empty construction site across the street, "Let's go somewhere private."

He walked across the barren street.

Midoriya scrambled after him when the shock wore off.

Ren ignored the No Trespassers!' sign and slipped into an opening in the wall surrounding the site. Metal beams and pillars rose high above them in the bare skeleton of a building, with construction equipment littered here and there.

Midoriya slipped in, but startled when Joker donned his costume. "What are you doing?"

Joker looked over his shoulder with a cheeky grin, "We'll have the best privacy on that platform up there. It shouldn't be hard for us to get to. Nobody ever looks up anyway."

"But I can't use my Quirk outside the school!"

"You have your Provisional Licence, don't you?" Joker shot his grapple towards the beams, "Where's your sense of adventure, Midoriya?"

Joker shot through the air, he could barely hear Midoriya sputter as he landed on the first beam with the natural grace of an acrobat. His coat tails fluttered with the wind, and stared down as Midoriya gaped at him from the ground.

“Are you coming or what?” Joker puffed out his chest and placed his fists on his hips in a hero’s pose, “Don’t tell me a hero-in-training is afraid of heights!?”

It did the trick, as seconds later green sparks danced around Midoriya’s body and he jumped up along the beams. Joker grinned as he continued his climb, eventually landing on the platform halfway up the unfinished building.

The cityscape stretched all around them, with U.A. being the closest landmark by miles. Strange, how the school looked so normal from the outside, the dark truth hidden from the public by its shining splendor. The breeze was slightly stronger up here, but it wouldn’t really pose a danger. Midoriya landed next to Joker, not even winded by the climb.

Ren let his costume disappear and sat at the edge of the platform, his legs dangling over the edge.

After a moment of shuffling on his feet, Midoriya sat next to him. He was a good foot or so away, and his nerves radiated off of him. Even without Third Eye, Ren could feel the curiosity of the other souls within Midoriya.

Ren leaned back on his hands and enjoyed the wind on his face. “So, should we flip a coin to see whose secret spills first?”

“I will.” Midoriya hunched in on himself, “Since I wasn’t supposed to hear about you not having a Quirk Factor in the first place.”

“Go ahead.”

Midoriya took a breath, “You might not believe me though.”

Ren tilted his head and tried not to let his amusement show, “Try me. My story might be the more unbelievable one.”

Midoriya pursed his lips, “Do you remember when I first gave you my number and said that I understood what you’ve been through? With being Quirkless, that is.”

Ren thought back. It must’ve been his first day working at the Blue Lotus. That felt like a lifetime ago. Ren nodded.

Midoriya smiled sadly, “This Quirk I have isn’t mine.”

“What do you mean?”

Midoriya took a deep breath, as if braving deeper waters he wasn’t quite prepared for, “It’s called One For All, and it’s been passed down like a sacred torch from one person to the next. I’ve only seen the Vestiges... er, the ‘souls’ as you called them, once.”

“Ah, so they’re connected to you through the Quirk.” Ren said thoughtfully, “Is one of them All Might?”

“How did you know?”

“The gold Vestige looks way too similar to be a coincidence.”

Midoriya chuckled, “He’s the one who gave it to me before I took the exam to get into U.A.!”

“He gave you a new power right before your exam?”

“Yeah...” Midoriya rubbed the back of his neck, “We spent 10 months cleaning mountains of trash from Dogabah Beach as training, and the morning of the exam-” Midoriya’s face shifted into a scarily accurate depiction of All Might’s iconic smile, “He was like ‘Eat this!’ and gave me one of his hairs to transfer the Quirk. I didn’t use it until the last minute of the exam, breaking both legs and my arm to save Uraraka from the Zero Pointer.”

Ren stared at him in disbelief. "During Overhaul's battle before Mona healed you... is that what this power does to you on a regular basis?"

"It did, but not anymore!" Midoriya waved his hands, "I've gotten to the point where I can safely control 20% without hurting myself!"

"What percentage did you use on Overhaul?"

Midoriya cleared his throat, "Uh... 100%? Well, technically more than that since your abilities boosted it even more." Midoriya turned red as Ren continued to gape at him, "It's fine, really! I've gotten a good handle on it by now, so you don't need to worry about it."

Ren released a long sigh and decided to move to the next point, "Quirks getting passed down this way aren't common, are they?"

"Quirks are supposed to be genetic." Midoriya shook his head, "This one has to be given to the next person willingly, and through DNA. Hence why I had to eat one of All Might's hairs."

Ren wrinkled his nose.

Midoriya rubbed his throat, "The past users have all kept it secret. I've never heard of any other Quirk getting passed down like this, well... except maybe through All For One."

Ren grimaced, "One For All and All For One. The names are too coincidental to be an accident, and I know All Might and All For One had some sort of vendetta. It's because of this Quirk, isn't it?"

"Y-yeah. This Quirk was born because All For One forced a Quirk onto his younger brother, who in turn wanted to stop All For One's tyranny and ended up passing it down. Each user tried to fight All For One, but they were never successful until All Might injured him."

"All For One was old... no wonder why the Quirk had to be passed down through so many people. And you're the ninth user?"

Midoriya nodded, and glanced at him with guilt weighing heavy on his shoulders, "I... I was supposed to be the one who... you know. I'm sorry that got forced on you."

"It's okay." Ren gave Midoriya an apologetic look when the other boy winced, "All Might apologized and took responsibility for what happened. I... It took a considerable amount of time and encouragement from my friends, but I've learned to forgive myself for what happened at Kamino. You shouldn't blame yourself, either."

Midoriya grimly nodded.

"Does anyone else know about your Quirk?"

"The only person aside from All Might is Kacchan."

"Kacchan?"

"Bakugo."

"You haven't even told Aizawa? Any of the other teachers?"

"No..."

"That's both detrimental to your health and limits how your teachers could help you properly, more so since you were breaking yourself trying to use it."

Midoriya gave him a shaky smile, "But I don't break my bones anymore? Mostly?"

Ren deadpanned, "Can I offer some advice?"

"Sure?"

"Tell the people you trust about your Quirk. You could learn a lot from them and improve with it rather than going at it alone." Ren tentatively reached out for Midoriya's shoulder, the other boy smiling softly, "Believe me, I speak from experience."

“Okay.” Midoriya bit his lip, his eyes turning thoughtful, “I’ll talk to All Might about it.”

Ren raised a brow, “You didn’t ask his permission to tell me. It’s your Quirk now, isn’t it?”

“I... You have a point.” Midoriya smiled sheepishly. “I’ll think about what you said, Amamiya.”

It wasn’t his power, so Ren wouldn’t push it any further. A short silence lingered as they looked out into the city. Ren knew it was his turn and Midoriya was patiently waiting to hear it.

“Arsene came to me when someone, who would eventually become one of my best friends, was about to be killed before my eyes.” Ren stared into the distance as Midoriya inhaled sharply, “We made a vow and I ripped off the mask over my heart to summon Arsene and save him.”

“A vow?”

“‘I am thou, thou art I.’”

Midoriya’s eyes lit up, “Where do Personas come from then, if not a Quirk Factor?”

“From the Sea Of Souls.”

“Sea of Souls?” Midoriya put the plastic bag with the rope aside and... whipped out a notebook and pen from somewhere. Ren gaped as Midoriya opened it and flipped through several pages of neat scrawling, “You said something like that back at the live interview before Hosu.”

“You remember that?”

“Yeah! Ever since I learned about you not having a Quirk Factor, I’ve been going over any footage and audio about you I could find! I-” Midoriya froze, “That doesn’t sound creepy, does it?”

Ren snorted, “You were only trying to find answers, I’d have done the same. Can I see your notebook?”

Midoriya handed it over.

Pages of theories and well-thought out paragraphs filled the notebook, complete with Persona names and their list of possible strengths, weaknesses, and abilities, down to scary accuracy. Ren froze at one particular page with his ‘Quirk’ name at the top, although the word Quirk had been crossed out.

“Wildcard, huh?” He smiled as he handed the notebook back, “You’re not too far off the mark. ‘Wildcards’ can hold multiple Personas, whereas most people can only hold one. Mona can only use Mercurius.”

Midoriya wrote that down, then closed the notebook and hugged it to his chest, “So... has the Sea Of Souls always been here? Could I... could I have awakened a Persona? Like you, I... there was a slime villain a while ago. He held Kacchan hostage and the heroes were just standing around watching, and Kacchan would’ve suffocated if nobody did anything! So I rushed forward to help...” Midoriya’s face hardened, “If Arsene came to you the way he did, then why don’t Personas come to people like me? Does it have to do with you lacking a Quirk Factor?”

“The Sea of Souls is as it sounds, a sea filled with human souls linked directly to the collective unconscious. It’s why Personas appear as gods and other beings from human mythologies and stories. But, as for you awakening to a Persona...” Ren’s stomach sank, “No, you wouldn’t have. Nobody in this entire world would be able to, if certain powers didn’t meddle where they weren’t supposed to...”

Midoriya looked at him strangely, “Why? What aren’t you telling me? There’s some greater secret than just your lack of a Quirk Factor, isn’t there?”

Ren stared at him in surprise. Midoriya's calculating gaze would tear apart any holes in Ren's story, so what else was there but to tell the truth?

"These powers, the Sea of Souls, Personas, my bond with people through the Arcanas... they're not natural to this world." Like Midoriya, Ren steeled himself to take a plunge he wasn't fully prepared for, "Mona and I were never supposed to be here, Midoriya."

The city faded away as Midoriya's eyes widened. The gears turned behind Midoriya's eyes as he digested the information at a speed Futaba would be impressed with.

"You weren't supposed to be here..." Midoriya started off slow, "How you dropped so suddenly into the USJ as if from nowhere, how nobody has ever heard of or seen you before. Your completely unique powers that pretty much break our reality. Oh, and Mona having the same sort of power... that never made much sense to me considering Quirks are supposed to be genetic... and I figure it would be extremely difficult to get animals with such a powerful Quirk like that anyway."

Ren opened his mouth, but Midoriya continued.

"Oh, but I suppose Mona doesn't have a Quirk Factor either." Midoriya cocked his head to the side as he strung more clues together, "Saying you were Quirkless that day at the Blue Lotus was so convincing because you've never had a Quirk Factor to begin with... but the only explanation I could think of is that you came from before Quirk Factors even changed the human brain... which would mean-" He lost all color in his face, and Ren feared the boy might get sick, "Time travel?"

Ren slowly nodded, "That's a step in the right direction. The year was 2016 when Mona and I were thrown into Kurogiri's portal."

"2016!?" Midoriya exclaimed, "B-but that's over 200 years ago!"

“202 years to be exact. You can imagine how Mona and I reacted when we found out.”

“But... b-but how?” Midoriya ran a hand through his hair, gripping the back of his neck, “Th-that’s shouldn’t even be possible, considering Quirks didn’t appear until much later!”

“I don’t know. My friends and I were fighting our last battle when a bunch of portals appeared and we were... banished, for the lack of a better term. And yes, I mean portals plural. My other teammates were sent through three others in pairs.” Ren swallowed as he felt his throat tighten, “I can only imagine what other kinds of worlds they’re trapped in, like Mona and I are here.”

They stared at each other, the rest of the world completely fading out of their awareness.

“‘Worlds.’ You said time travel was a step in the right direction, but not the correct answer. Does that mean that you’re from a different world altogether?”

“Not completely different. I’m still from Japan, my version of Japan.” Ren smiled sadly as Midoriya gaped like a fish, “I hesitated for one second during our last battle in Shibuya, but it was enough for our adversary to gain the upper hand. I don’t even know how he got a power like that in the first place.”

“Then... there must be some presence at the USJ where you came in, is that the cause of the Red Rain? When it happened, I noticed that the center of it was towards the facility.”

Ren smirked, “You’re a smart cookie, Midoriya. The USJ is the center of the storm, but its been leeching outwards because the worlds are all slowly bleeding together and changing the rules of these realities. For example, I may not have a Quirk Factor, but Aizawa’s Quirk still works on me because my world has something to suppress Personas... with nasty side affects.”

Midoriya flinched, “After the Musutafu Raid when you said you were really sick, was that because of Aizawa-sensei’s Quirk?”

“Yeah. It basically cripples me.” Ren nodded, “I know he still feels terrible about it.”

Midoriya let out a shaky breath, “I-I... this is...”

“I told you my story would be the more unbelievable one.”

Midoriya swallowed, “But it... it makes sense.”

Ren’s eyes widened, “It does ?”

“There have been multiverse theories for centuries, although there’s never been concrete proof, but if I line up all of the evidence-”

“Midoriya-”

“It would make sense because you’ve lived in a world without Quirks. You’ve even said the word ‘magic’ during that interview instead of Quirk too, and now with new information on the Sea Of Souls and Personas, a-and those portals, I-” He paused as he stared Ren in the eye, “A world without Quirks...”

Ren swallowed thickly, “I’m surprised you’re not calling me a liar.”

“Well, there was always something mysterious about you.” Midoriya studied Ren carefully as he hugged the notebook tighter to his chest, “You always seemed so sad and distant, even if you tried to hide it. And at the USJ I could tell you were lost and confused. This world isn’t... isn’t your real home, and you’ve been torn away from your real friends and family. Now I finally understand why you did everything the way you did.”

Ren’s heart twisted as Midoriya stared at him with such a longing expression, “What was it like? Living in a Quirkless world, I mean.”

“Normal, I guess?” Ren waved towards the city, suddenly remembering its existence, “Nobody had any Quirks, and anything related to superheroes or villains stayed in comic books or TV shows.”

Midoriya looked up into the sky, narrowing his eyes as if he tried to pierce past the blue veil and into the void beyond, “You know, if our technology didn’t stagnate so much because of the appearance of Quirks, we’d be taking interstellar holidays by now.” Midoriya turned back to Ren, “What about Personas, then? Did everyone have them?”

“No. They were mostly kept secret.” Ren frowned, “But I’m told there were Persona users before me that saved the world in silence, and others who used theirs for their own selfish reasons.”

“... And you? You said you were fighting something before you were ‘banished’ here.”

Ren rubbed the back of his neck, “The Red Rain.”

“What about it?”

“That’s what the skies over my home look like right now.” Ren said, “A thing pretending to be a god took over our reality and distorted it like that, you only got a small taste of its power.”

“That’s... that’s terrifying. And it’s the reason you surrendered to U.A.?” Midoriya’s expression softened, “Because you’re trying to find a way home and save it, right?”

“Pretty much. If things stay as they are now, then he’ll take over this world, and all the others my friends are stuck in, too. Maybe more beyond.” Ren stood up and looked towards U.A., a breeze kicked up and ruffled his hair and clothes, “I can’t allow that to happen.”

“If that’s the case, when you defeat this god...” Midoriya stood up with him, notebook tucked under one arm while the other held the bag, "We'll have to say goodbye, won't we?"

Ren smiled sadly, "Most likely, the boundaries between the worlds need to heal for things to return to normal."

Midoriya's eyes flooded with tears, but he quickly rubbed them away with his sleeve before Ren could reach out to him. Midoriya sniffled and squared his shoulders, and although his eyes were still watery, he held Ren's gaze with powerful conviction.

"You and Mona aren't doing this alone, are you?"

"No. A few people know the truth." Ren stated, "However, something's going to happen at the USJ today when I do the finale. People will be safe in my stadium while it goes down, but afterwards I'm going to tell the other heroes everything. I hope they'll believe my story in the first place."

Midoriya took a step forward, his whole being blazing with fierce tenacity, "I-I'll have your back if they don't!"

Ren's blinked rapidly, mouth dropping.

"If they don't believe you then I'll stick up for you! If they won't fight alongside you, then I will!" Midoriya placed his fist over his heart, the bag in his grasp crinkling, "S-so many events would've happened way differently if it wasn't for you. At the USJ you healed Aizawa-sensei, at Hosu you helped us fight Stain, how you stuck up for the Quirkless people in Sapporo, the Summer Camp, Kamino, what happened with Eri... It's the least I could do for everything you've done for us!"

Ren wetly chuckled, his heart warmed by Midoriya's earnestness, "Are you related to All Might or something?"

"Wha-" A whine screeched out of Midoriya's throat as he turned beet red, "Wh-wh-where did that come from!?"

“He made the same promise last night.” Ren grinned as he ruffled Midoriya’s hair, “If things go to plan, then the teachers should believe me. Tsukauchi will be there to confirm everything.”

“Oh...” Midoriya deflated.

“We have the Festival covered, but I won’t hesitate to ask for your help after. We might need all the extra hands we can get.”

Midoriya broke out into a bright smile and nodded.

Ren let his hand drop. Only a moment passed before a familiar presence prickled his mind, jitterbugging in pride.

“Can I have a moment with my green child, too? I’ve been waiting so long!”

Midoriya noticed Ren’s expression, “What’s wrong?”

Ren laughed, “Cerberus wants to have a few words with you.”

“He... he does?”

Ren allowed Yatagarasu to return to him, and in his place Cerberus rose up from the blue ashes.

Midoriya gasped as the great hound sat in front of him, wagging his metal tail, “I want to say that I’m very proud of my green child for believing in the Trickster! We could not have had a better Chariot to help drive him forward towards his goals.” Cerberus bowed his head to Midoriya, “Thank you so much!”

“The Chariot, huh?” Midoriya slowly reached out to pet Cerberus, fingers scratched behind the hound’s ears as his smile grew, “I have a lot to thank you for, too. You saved me from the USJ Nomu and helped out during the Summer Camp.”

Cerberus’ eyes sparkled, “Trickster! The Chariot is thanking me!”

Ren laughed at the surge of joy in Cerberus, “I don’t know if you remember, Midoriya, but there was one time at the beach when you saw me around a bunch of displace sand?”

“Y-yeah.” Midoriya paused in his scratching of Cerberus, “I... I thought someone had bullied you because you were covered head to toe in it.”

Ren patted Cerberus’ side, “I was actually playing fetch with Cerberus. He’s the one who covered me in sand, and he had to dig me out once.”

Midoriya gave Cerberus a bug-eyed look, “I never thought I’d hear about how you were playing fetch with the guard dog of hell .”

Cerberus chuckled, “It was so fun playing with Master!”

Suddenly, the platform groaned under Cerberus’ weight. They all froze at it.

Ren sighed, “We should get back, preferably before we break something.”

Cerberus whined as he put his forehead against Midoriya’s, while Midoriya gave Cerberus one last scratch behind the ears. The guard dog of hell switched seamlessly with Yatagarasu, who took to the sky once more.

Midoriya watched Yatagarasu circle them as Joker donned his costume. Joker rappelled down with his grapple, while Midoriya dropped with the aid of his quirk. They left the construction site behind, but Ren looked at the small tea shop.

He stopped Midoriya, “I’ll be right back.”

Midoriya blinked as Ren went inside. He chose a couple of freshly baked chocolate croissants and a few boxes of tea to take back, and payed the lovely old couple running the place with the 5,000 yen clip.

He met Midoriya outside and handed one of the giant croissants over to him.

“A little pick-me-up is needed, I think.” Ren said. “We talked about some heavy topics up there.”

Midoriya nodded and took the first bite, his eyes lighting up as he chewed. They were halfway back to the school and through their treats, when Midoriya spoke again, crumbs peppering his lips.

“Can I ask you something?”

“Shoot.” Ren said over a mouthful of delicious chocolate.

“Why did you start with vigilantism? Why not go to U.A. for help?”

“What do you think would happen if we said we were from another world with absolutely no evidence?” Ren countered.

“O-oh. Right...”

“The first friends we made here didn’t even believe us at first.” Midoriya winced, but Ren continued, “But to answer your first question, we started vigilantism to spread our name around so our friends would be able to reach out if they made it here. It didn’t... pan out the way we planned, and I think it got a little out of hand there for a while. Even so, I don’t regret it.”

Midoriya hummed, staring thoughtfully at his croissant.

“But sometimes I wonder if they wouldn’t have agreed with our plan at all.”

Midoriya blinked at him, “What do you mean?”

“After Kamino, when I—” When I died, Ren almost said, “-when I wasn’t well, I had a dream with one of my friends from back home, at the cafe I lived in.” Ren shook his head as the croissant suddenly tasted of ash, “He said I was an idiot to interfere with this world’s history so much, that I should've let people deal with their own problems because he thought I was abandoning our people back home."

"He's wrong." Midoriya stated without missing a beat.

Ren smirked as he imagined Akechi's reaction. Would it be the awkward laughter from the Detective Prince politely brushing it off, or would Akechi reveal his true colors and glare holes through Midoriya's head? Judging by how Akechi acted in his dream, or whatever that encounter was, he figured it would be the latter.

"You really think so?"

"Of course I do!" Midoriya cried, "I've been told the essence of a true hero is meddling when you don't need to! It doesn't matter where people are from, whether in this world or others, if people are suffering then we can't just turn our backs to them. I think... we're alike in that way, Ren."

Ren's eyes widened at the use of his given name.

Midoriya continued, eyes forward in confidence, "All Might chose me for his successor because I tried to save Kacchan despite being powerless. You've saved people like that too, right?"

"Yeah, I have." Ren grinned, "... Thanks, Midoriya."

Midoriya beamed like the ray of sunshine he was.

By that point, they had finished their treats and approached the school's back gate. Midoriya reached into his pocket for his school ID, but Ren stopped him.

"Can I do it?" Ren asked as he got out his own official Teacher's Assistant ID, "It'd be the first time I've ever done this."

Midoriya laughed and let Ren scan them in. They walked through the gate with bright smiles, but Ren tensed when the foul air hit him like a ton of bricks and made his soul ring out again. Yatagarasu's feathers bristled overhead.

It emboldened him for his mission today.

"One more thing before we split off," Ren said as they stopped at the edge of the Festival grounds, "Why were you so embarrassed when I asked if you were related to All Might?"

Midoriya turned red again, "You're not the first person to say something like that."

"Really? Who else?"

"Todoroki." Midoriya suddenly wouldn't meet Ren's eyes, "He... he once asked me if I was All Might's secret love child."

Ren burst out in laughter.

Midoriya floundered, "I-It's not funny!"

"No, no, you're right. It's not funny." Ren wiped his eyes, "It's downright hilarious . I'm giving Peppermint a free milkshake for this."

"Ren!!"

They parted ways in much higher spirits than when they'd left. That invisible wall between them was completely demolished while the Chariot Arcana flooded with new confidence and strength.

Unbeknownst to them, the spirits of One For All were drawn to it with flames rekindled.

Yatagarasu floated down and landed in Ren's floofy hair, peering at his Trickster upside down, "You know what I noticed, Trickster?"

Ren blinked at him, "What?"

Yatagarasu tilted his head in amusement, "Thanks to the Chariot's new strength, you're not straining to hold eight of us at once."

He stopped dead in his tracks, "Oh. You're right. But let's not push our luck too early."

"Understood!"

Aizawa gave Ren a deadpanned glare when he finally emerged from the bushes.

"You were almost late." Aizawa said as Ren wiped the foliage off of his clothes, "The others are already gathered."

Ren chuckled, "Sorry. The outing with Midoriya lasted longer than I thought."

Aizawa plucked a leaf out of Ren's hair and tossed it away, "It went well, then?"

Ren smiled, "It did."

"... Good. Thank you."

"Don't mention it." Ren stuck his hands in his pockets as Aizawa led him down a small path.

They entered a specific clearing set away from the Festival, paved with a road towards the USJ and a bus waiting.

"Well, well, fashionably late, as always!" Mr. Compress said with a hearty chuckle, "Just the way we like to do things."

Miruko cackled, "Geez, talk about waiting for the very last minute!"

"Did your adventure with Midoriya go well?" Nezu asked.

"Yep." Ren said, "I ended up telling him the truth."

The Thieves exchanged wild glances. The teachers and other heroes looked worried. Yagi especially had wide eyes. Nezu, however, clapped his paws together.

“Oh? And he believed you?”

Ren nodded, “He did, and he offered to help us if we needed it.”

Nezu’s eyes sparkled, “Wonderful!”

Yagi chuckled softly, “That’s Young Midoriya for you, he’s always been so smart and has a heart of gold.”

“Um...”

Ren looked over as Tensei raised his hand, eyes widening. Tensei had donned his full Ingenium hero outfit, the pouches around his hips filled with Metaverse Items. The Goddess Horn from Ishtar was tied securely to his belt, too.

“Why did you tell another student before us?” Tensei asked. “I’m just curious.”

“He figured some things out on his own.” Ren replied with a shrug, “Lying to him would be an insult.”

“I see...”

“I’m surprised you have your hero costume.” Ren said, “Is that what you went off this morning for?”

“Yeah, I wanted it to be a surprise.” Tensei sheepishly grinned, “Of course, my sidekicks and the rest of the public don’t know about this. I’m not coming out of retirement as a front-line pro either, but I need to be at my absolute best if I’m going to help you! These Shadows won’t know what hit them!”

“Damn straight!” Miruko yelled.

Nezu clapped his paws together, "The gate will open soon, and we must be off before then! Does everyone remember the plan?"

La Brava held up her camera, "Gentle Criminal and I will hype up the public with a stream of the Festival!"

Gentle Criminal beamed with excitement, "Oh, to be on the air again!" Gentle gained a sudden seriousness, his left hand tracing his facial hair, "We'll end it before Joker's finale, and protect the stadium after."

"Meanwhile, all of us will be at the USJ with the Attendants." Cementoss said, "Waiting for Shadows to appear."

"Lavenza will be on stand-by with me." Ren said with a confident nod, "Kohryu and Gabriel will patrol the outskirts of the Festival Grounds, changing the weather and sky color to cover for us, in case anyone is outside during the Red Rain."

"How will you get to the USJ?" Hawks asked.

"You haven't told us that part of your plan." Nighteye said as he adjusted his glasses, "Kohryu giving you a ride isn't exactly subtle."

"Don't worry." Ren stated with a mysterious smirk, "When it happens, I'll pull a disappearing act and be at the USJ faster than you can say 'Cultural Festival!'"

Nezu gave him a critical look, as if he knew more than he was letting on, "Hmm, I'll put my trust in you, Amamiya. Everything seems to be in order so far." Nezu looked around to everyone, "We must not dally any longer."

The heroes and vigilantes going to the USJ filed into the bus.

Nighteye glanced at Ren, "Mona went with Eri and Kaito, and will meet up with you before the Finale. I promise Mirio will take good care of them."

“Don’t worry. I trust Mirio.”

Nighteye gave him a curt nod before he boarded the bus.

“We’ll be off, too!” Gentle Criminal straightened his vest and pulled on his gloves, “Our audience awaits!”

Ren chuckled, “Have fun, you two.”

La Brava beamed at him as she opened her camera screen, “We will!”

They went their separate ways. Ren in one, Gentle Criminal and La Brava in another, and the bus took off towards the USJ.

By the time Ren reached Risumi and Ayumu’s location, the gates to the public were beginning to open.

“MIDORIYA, FINALLY!!!” Raccoon Eyes screeched as she snatched the extra rope away from him, “GO GET CHANGED ASAP MISTER!!”

“You were almost late, Deku!” Bakugo snapped from the drum set on the stage, “Hurry the hell up or we’ll start without you!”

“G-got it!”

Deku rushed off backstage to change into the bright yellow costumes.

Ponytail stared after him, stopping her own final checks on the keyboard.

Bakugo frowned at her, “What?”

“Ah, nothing. It just...” She glanced around, the other extras were running around like chickens with their heads cut off, “Something was different with Midoriya. Like... he knows ? I just saw that same spark in him that we saw in each other weeks ago... after we talked with Joker.”

Bakugo’s lips curled as if he had just sucked on a lemon, “I noticed too. We can’t talk to him here.”

Ponytail nodded, “After our concert then.”

“After.” Bakugo agreed.

IcyHot, who was arranging some cables nearby, frowned at them.

“G-guys!!” Rock Face burst in with a harried pigeon on his shoulder, “Th-the gates have opened!”

The excitement and nerves within the room shot up so much Bakugo could taste the raw emotions, like metal coating his whole mouth. He wasn’t sure if it was just his mind playing tricks on him, or if the precedent of the ‘Red Rain’ had already begun.

“... Already a small spike.” Ren muttered to himself as he checked the readings.

“Ren, sweetie, can you get those brownies and bring them to the front display case?” Risumi called.

Ren shoved his phone in his apron pocket, “Right away!”

Ayumu smirked as he handed Ren the scrumptious plate of brownies, which Ayumu had cut into small squares and arranged into a pyramid on the plate. A new notebook was open on the counter, filled cover to cover of recipes new and old in Ren’s own handwriting.

A tall blue canvas ceiling stretched high overhead, courtesy of the enormous tent-like structure that served as the temporary Blue Lotus. They'd already started his next batch of delicious goods the moment Ren whisked the plate away.

The front counter was similar in nature to its predecessor, and in truth there was little difference between the set-up from inside this tent and how it looked within the original Blue Lotus. The one stark difference was the seating. Completely open to the air, and surrounded by beautiful cobblestone pathways and trees burning in the peak of fall, were several tables and benches, enough to seat a few hundred people at once.

Ren made it to the front and arranged the brownies with the other delicious food.

"Are you nervous, Risumi?" Ren asked as he shut the display case.

"Not really." She rubbed her palms together, "I'm excited. So many new people are going to try our food!"

Ren chuckled, "I'm glad Lunch Rush is helping out."

"Same here." She smiled softly at Ren, "And you, too."

"The chocolate cookies are done cooling!" Ayumu called from the kitchen.

"Coming!"

It was back and forth from there. Just by the sheer quantity of cookies, brownies, sliced cakes and tarts, varieties of coffee and hot chocolate, quiches and pies, multiple pots of curry bubbling with different flavors... they must've been at this for several hours already.

Fafnir watched Ren work as he lay between the kitchen and the front counter. A pile of crates were stacked behind him, and sitting at the top was Lavenza, idly flipping the pages of the Compendium stuffed to the brim with bookmarks,

“My, my,” Lavenza said as Ren rushed past them for the sixth time, arms full of platters for the display case, “They’re so busy and no humans have come to try their food yet.”

Fafnir snorted, “It’s a necessity to have so much prepared. According to the Trickster’s memories, there’ll be so many hungry humans that there won’t be anything left.”

“Ah.” Lavenza longingly stared at the display case, “I bet Elizabeth would do anything to have it all to herself.”

The tip of Fafnir’s tail bobbed back and forth, “Hmph, her sweet tooth knows no bounds.”

It was the tenth time Ren passed that he stopped in front of them, smiling, “I haven’t forgotten you two, you know.”

“What is this?” Lavenza put the Compendium aside to grab the plate he offered in both hands, marveling at the beautiful slice of cake with whipped cream frosting and a perfect strawberry on top, glistening like a ruby.

“Strawberry shortcake.” Ren said with a smirk, “I think you’ll like it.”

She delicately took the tiny fork off the plate, cut a tiny piece, and put it in her mouth. Her expression radiated happiness, a pleased hum in her throat as she bobbed back and forth and kicked out her legs.

“Oh, it is delightful, Trickster!”

Ren chuckled and looked down to Fafnir, holding out the curry bun in his other hand.

Fafnir crunched it down in one bite, licking his lips, “Hmmm, not bad! A bit spicy, but not enough.”

“Well, it’s the spiciest curry bun we’ve ever made and most people probably wouldn’t be able to eat it normally. You’ve got a strong stomach, pal.”

Fafnir preened at Ren's praise.

"Ren!" Risumi cried from the front, "Our first customers are coming!"

Ren rushed to the front counter, surprised at the familiar group walking up to their tent.

Kagome, Tokaji, and Yuuto - The first people he'd met when was captured and sent to the Sapporo lab. They looked healthy, recovered from their ordeal at Sapporo, at least physically. They broke out in smiles when they saw him.

"What are you guys doing here?" Ren asked, eyes wide.

"Well that's a fine 'how do you do' after vanishing on us like you did!" Tokaji cried, "Do you know how worried we've been!? For MONTHS!? Were you ever gonna tell us that you were a badass vigilante in disguise!?"

Yuuto placed a hand on Tokaji's shoulder, and stated in a much calmer manner, "What he means is, it's good to see you again after so long."

Kagome smiled as she held up the card hanging around each of their necks, "Hawks was kind enough to buy VIP passes for every person who was in that lab. They let us in early!"

"... He did?" Ren asked, "He didn't tell me."

"He wanted it to be a surprise." Tokaji crossed his arms and huffed, "I'm not surprised that puffed up chicken kept it a secret."

"Is Kaien here too?" Ren asked.

"Yep, with his sister." Kagome looked behind them, "They went off to one of your fancy tents, Joker. They'll probably get here eventually."

"Joker..."

A fourth person stepped up to the counter. She was a tall woman, with bright pink hair wrapped in twin messy buns, extra strands flowing around her face and neck. Her eyes were the same color. Her clothes were some sort of leather gray dress that doubled as armor, with a stripe of vibrant orange on the ankle-length skirt. Another long-sleeved coat was over the dress in the same harsh gray color.

“Who are you?” Risumi asked.

“You wouldn’t know me,” The woman smiled as she kept staring at Ren, “But you saved one of my comrades when he was trapped with these people. He’s completely recovered now and has returned home to us, thanks to you.”

Ren’s eyes widened, his eyes trailed to the stark black tattoo under the woman’s clavicle, of a demon’s jaws roaring with jagged sound waves. For some reason, it spoke to Ren of inhuman power.

She reached into her jacket pocket and produced a small envelope, to which she deeply bowed and held out to Risumi with both hands, “Please, take this token of thanks from my family... from Embryon, for saving Gale.”

Risumi traded a glance with Ren before taking it. She opened it and gasped, her hand covering her mouth as she stared at the check.

Ren gawked at the amount written out, “That’s a lot of zeroes.”

“But this is... this is too much!” Risumi cried.

“No amount is ever too much for having him back, safe and sound.” The woman said softly, “Please accept it.”

Risumi teared up before she called for her husband, who came rushing to the front wielding a ladle like a mighty sword. Fafnir snorted in amusement not 10 feet away. Even Lunch Rush popped his head out at the commotion.

“What is it? What’s wrong?” Ayumu asked.

“We got our first donation!” Risumi handed him the check, his face paling as he stared at it.

“What do you want?” Ayumu said lamely as he stared at the group, “You get free food for life.”

“I... can’t stay.” The woman turned away, “But thank you for the offer.”

“Wait! At least tell us your name!” Risumi said.

The woman had a kind smile as she looked back at them, “Argilla.”

Argilla walked away, disappearing into the trees in the direction of the school entrance.

After a moment, Tokaji huffed, “Well, I’m starving! Whatcha guys got to eat?”

Kagome face palmed, “Tokaji...”

Ren smirked as he gestured to the chalk menu hanging over them, “We have all sort of cakes, curries, and other dishes, but we are running a challenge to see who can handle the most spicy curry bun we’ve ever made. Want to try it?”

“What do I get if I win?”

“Bragging rights.”

“Fine, then.” Tokaji grinned, “Give me your worst, Joker! I bet my Quirk will beat it out of the park!”

“Does Light Pain Resistance even work on spicy foods?” Yuuto asked.

“It does!” Tokaji cracked his knuckles as an excited glint sparked in his eyes, “That’s why this’ll be easy!”

Ren turned around to retrieve one of the spicy curry buns, “It’s your funeral, pal.”

Kagome and Yuuto stared at each other, and shrugged. Ten minutes later Tokaji was bent over their table in pain because one bite of the curry bun had knocked him on his ass.

Fafnir scoffed as he watched from the tent, “It wasn’t that spicy to me…”

“Your tolerance is far above a normal human’s, Fafnir.” Lavenza said as she gingerly placed her empty plate aside, “You must give him some credit for trying.”

“If you say so.” Fafnir stretched out like a languid cat, watching the Trickster and this world’s Strength happily work together as people began to flood the area.

“You ready?” Hitoshi asked, “Our first victims will be here any minute.”

“Of course!” Alice’s eerie smile showed too many teeth, and was about as comforting as a poisonous centipede crawling over his skin, “You better hide before its too late.”

Hitoshi smirked and gently ruffled her hair. With the flexibility and strength he’d gained in the past few months of training, crawling up to his hiding spot in the ceiling was as easy as cake. The pair waited for their prey.

Screams, followed by frightened laughter, grew louder until a pair of shuffling footsteps finally made it to their hallway. Hitoshi watched as two people, a man and a woman linking arms, slowly traipsed under him, unaware of the teenager dressed like a spooky phantom just feet above them.

Alice's back was to the pair, who just took notice of her.

"Dear, look!" The woman pointed at Alice as she untangled herself from her companion and stepped closer.

"What's a little girl doing here?" The man asked and, judging by the quiver in his voice, he was terrified.

"Honey, did you get separated from your parents?"

Alice turned around, that eerie smile splitting her face, "Can you do something for me...?" She whispered in a quiet and innocent voice.

The woman recoiled, and though Hitoshi couldn't see their faces, he imagined them losing all color.

"Wh-what is it, sweetie?"

The shadows came to life around them, undulating as a smothering purple aura flooded the hallway. Alice's pale hair wriggled like worms and her eyes gleamed a manic red.

"Would you please die for me?"

The woman backpedaled so hard she bumped into her companion, the both of them shaking like leaves, "Wh-what!?"

That was Hitoshi's cue. He hung from the ceiling by his legs, completely upside-down. He was as silent as an owl's wing beat until he situated himself right behind the couple.

"Boo."

It was a whisper, a mere weak puff of breath, but that was enough.

The woman shrieked with bloody murder and the man's scream was higher pitched than a teenage girl's. They scrambled away in a blind terror, Alice stepping aside as they rushed passed her to the exit.

Hitoshi laughed and held down his hand to Alice, "Great job, little sis."

Her aura faded away, her hair went still, but her smile stayed. She high-fived him.

They heard more screams nearby, and Hitoshi's smile almost matched hers, "Ready for our next victims?"

Alice eagerly nodded. Hitoshi situated himself in the ceiling as the next group of brave adrenaline junkies walked into their trap, their frantic screams adding to the din of fear tainting their haunted house.

"It has been quite some time, dear viewers," The camera was angled at Gentle Criminal framed by an enormous red and black tent as big as a mountain. In his hand he held a porcelain cup of hot tea and a matching kettle, "Worry not, for La Brava and I have returned for our finest venture yet! But this is not an ordinary video, no! This is... our first ever live stream!"

He held out his arms as a dramatic wind kicked up around them.

"And what is behind me, you may ask?" Gentle Criminal whirled around, splashing tea onto the grass.

The tent's entrance was sealed with a mighty black gate, and that itself was tied in bright silver chains. A large sign hung from the chains, midnight black with silver letters flowing across as if etched from the stars themselves.

"Why, this will house the Grand Finale of the Festival, orchestrated by none other than Joker himself!"

La Brava smiled fondly as he leaned in and whispered to the viewers.

“However, such a wondrous show would not do justice from watching it on your screen! No, if you want to witness the true majesty of Joker’s performance yourself, it’s best that you come see it in person!”

The sky suddenly changed as Kohryu and Gabriel flew overhead. La Brava panned the camera up when Megidolaon Stars rained down and showered them in a river of rainbows.

Gentle Criminal’s laughter brought the camera on him once more, his body bathed in prismatic shades, “Such beauty and splendor is second to none! There is still time to witness this once in a life-time event! Come to the U.A. Cultural Festival while you still can, dear viewers! I promise you won’t regret it! Join us...”

The wind picked up as Kohryu’s musical roar sang into the ears of those tuning in to the stream.

“As we go around the wonders and beauties of U.A.’s Cultural Festival!!”

People all across Japan wondered how Joker’s Cirque Des Dieux could compare to the rest of the school’s festivities. Hours later, when word spread about the mind-blowing splendor of the Cultural Festival Finale, those who didn’t attend could only listen to the enchanting stories with forlorn regret.

Joker is literally the whole damn circus. What are all the other personas doing, you may ask? You'll find out more next chapter :) And honestly Joker's Finale has been one of the most amazing things to write for this story. I love it so much.

I'm so excited for next chapter you guys. SHITE GOES DOWN and it goes down hard. I think even the chapter title alone will have you guys hyped.

But with that said, I'm going to take a break after the next chapter. My health seems to be swinging between extremes and unable to settle on a stable middle, and I desperately need time to recharge so we can do the last portion of this story properly. We only have 9 chapters left(plus the epilogue) and I want to do them justice. Besides, next chapter leaves off on the perfect point for that. And we're almost at the 3rd anniversary of this story! I can't believe how time flies. I may do a stream or something to celebrate it, but not entirely sure what I'll do yet.

Next chapter will be on May 6th, and I'm planning to return either July 1st or July 8th.

ALSO!!! There's a part 3 of the Thieves Den now! If you want to see Joker and Seth(Yes, SETH!!) romp around the apocalyptic world of Nier Automata, then please check it out!

Rivers In The Desert

Chapter 91: Rivers In The Desert

When a cool drop of water's all I need

Gotta clear my head of anger and greed

A place to refresh heart and mind

Can I find some time in Rivers in a dry land

The last ace in a lost hand

When the hope of new beginnings burned our feet

Now we need it

A heartbeat for a tin man

An oasis in a singed land

Remind us what we're here for Creating new life

Creating rivers in the desert

HAPPY 3RD DTESH ANNIVERSARY EVERYBODY! :D Let's celebrate with an early chapter release!

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

Fanart!

fanart on Twitter!

Drapes of rich violet cascaded over every surface like velvet waterfalls. Smokey veils of incense swirled through the air, the curling wisps glowing from the light of the crystal chandelier hanging over the table.

The curtains were parted by the milky hand of a woman, her face equally moon-white as he commanded the beauty of Japanese empresses of times past. Layers of vibrant crimson and white of her junihitoe were like fresh blood speckled on white lilies. She stepped in, her kimono parting to reveal eight inky black legs of a spider.

“My, my.” She studied the tent until her eyes landed on the Persona rising over the table, “To what mighty deity do I have the pleasure of meeting today?”

“I am Vasuki.” The Persona’s raspy voice scraped through the tent, “I who churned the Sea of Milk for the Devas and Asuras. What is your name, miss?”

“Arachne, darling. Just Arachne, no ‘miss.’”

“Arachne.” Vasuki gestured one of his arms across the table. “Have a seat.”

Arachne was careful not to rip any of the cushions with her sharp legs as she settled herself at the table, legs folding in on themselves. She adjusted the layers of her kimono to cover them.

Vasuki reached for the deck at the center of the table. The hypnotic movements of his six arms spread the deck between his hands, holding the cards like splayed fans of black and red.

“Choose three.” Vasuki held his arms out to her, “See what the past, present, and future hold for you.”

Arachne didn't take any two cards from the same hand.

Vasuki folded the deck with a flourish and set it aside, then took the three cards to spread them in front of Arachne.

“Your past...” Vasuki flipped over the first with a wry smile. “The Chariot. You have a tumultuous past, but through hard work and ambition, you have been victorious in your pursuits.”

“Yes.” Arachne crossed her arms, “As you can see, my Quirk makes me appear as a demon and a vile temptress. Not only that, I started my business after my daughter's death to deal with the grief.”

Vasuki dipped his head and flipped the second card, “The Queen of Cups. Despite all of the harshness you've been dealt, you choose to remain compassionate and loving towards others. Is this correct?”

“Yes.” Arachne's expression softened, and Vasuki saw the remains of the loving mother she once was, “My business helps those who share my misfortune in not looking... entirely human. I make them clothes to suit their unique needs which most other stores will not provide. I've put smiles on the faces of those who have been called monsters and freaks, and their happiness has been a humbling reward.”

“And now, for your future-” Vasuki flipped over the final card, his hand hovering over it in reverence. “Ah... The World.”

Arachne raised a delicate brow, “Is there some great significance in The World?”

Vasuki chuckled, “You will gain closure and completion at the end of your journey. Your accomplishments and goals are all fulfilled, and you will be able to evolve into the next significant part of your life, to whatever new horizons expand before you.”

Arachne's face fell into shock, "I see. I'm glad I came here for such good tidings. But you yourself seem taken aback by The World. May I ask why?"

"The one I treasure most is connected to The World, too. He was forced into a harsh journey not unlike yourself, but all troubles will resolve soon." Vasuki placed all of his hands together in prayer positions and bowed to her, "Thank you for coming to my abode. I did not expect such a heartening first reading."

"It was my pleasure." Arachne stood, "I shouldn't hold up the line. It's quite the madhouse out there."

"Wait a moment." Vasuki reached under the table for another hidden stack of cards, taking one from the pile of red and black. He handed it to Arachne.

She read aloud, "'To the citizens of Japan, take heart and accept this invitation to the most wondrous show in the world, the Cirque Des Dieux! This invitation is from yours truly -Joker, Leader of the Phantom Thieves of Hearts.'" She turned it over in her hand to see a time and location, "What is this?"

"The Finale of the Cultural Festival. Joker will be the star of the show. You won't want to miss it."

"Sounds exciting." She tucked the card into her kimono, "I'll be there."

Arachne walked out, her black spider legs clacking on the ground like metal. Vasuki had enough time to shuffle the Tarot cards before the next person walked in, and so the cycle began again.

Hero too, I am a hero too

My heart is set and I won't back down

Hero too, strength doesn't make a hero

True heroes stand up for what they believe

Yeah I'll be

Hero too, I am a hero too

My heart is set and I won't back down

Hero too, strength doesn't make a hero

True heroes stand up for what they believe

So wait and see

I have met so many heroes in my life

Gave me the strength and courage to survive

Gave me the power to smile everyday

Now it's my turn to be the one to make you smile!

Kaien cackled as he stared at the frozen mirror, "Sis, check this one out!"

The wavy mirror warped her arms and legs into long spaghetti noodles, while her torso and her wild strawberry hair condensed into big blobs. Kaori giggled at it.

"This one's my favorite." Kaien declared.

"Really?" Kaori squinted at the mirror, "What about the one that made us look like bendy straws? I liked that one!"

“Weeeeeell...” Kaien smirked, “I suppose it could be a close second. But only because you like it so much.”

Kaori stuck her tongue out at him.

So far, this tent had been the siblings’ favorite. This frozen wonderland contained a forest of glistening crystal trees along with a small frozen lake that doubled as an ice skating rink, to the white carousel made of diamond that actually worked, and now to the final portion which was a long hallway of frosty mirrors.

It was chilly, as was expected for a mystical frozen wonderland constructed within a tent, but somehow it wasn’t cold enough to make them freeze to the bone.

Another laugh caught their attention a few mirrors down. An older man with a fox-like grin, dressed in traditional monk’s robes, stared at himself in the mirrors. That frozen mirror made him look like a squat pill-bug.

“I think this one is my favorite.” The old man said.

Kaien’s smile matched the old man’s laughter in genuine compassion, “Come try this one!”

The old man walked to the mirror Kaien pointed to, another bout of laughter escaping him, “You’re right. I do like this one.”

Kaori puffed up her cheeks and threw a playful glare at her brother. The three of them continued down the last few mirrors before reaching the exit, stepping into the sunlit Festival Grounds. There was a table outside, manned by one of the small robots they’ve seen zooming around. It shoved three of the red and black cards in their hands and waved them away.

“We already have a few.” Kaori said as she read it over again, “They’re all the same.”

The monk hummed, "Are you two going?"

"Of course we are!" Kaien stated, "There's no way we're going to miss out! Right, Kaori?"

Kaori smiled, her eyes lighting up, "Yes. I wouldn't miss it for the world after everything Joker's done for us."

"I'll go too." The monk tucked the card into his robe, "Joker's Finale must be something special if they're advertising it so much."

"Right?" Kaori's gaze was drawn down the path, "What's that?"

It looked to be another of Joker's tents, though it was a simple striped awning. The big sign said 'Black Frost's Mythology Mania!' In the raised stage, surrounded by people, was a tall black spirit with red eyes and purple clothes. It held a microphone in its large hands and a basket by its feet.

"Next one, ho!" Black Frost said, "This deity is a feathered serpent related to wind, knowledge, arts, merchants, and learning! It was also one of the top patron gods of Aztecs, ho!"

One girl raised her hand, and Black Frost pointed to her, "Quetzalcoatl?"

"Heeeeeee ho!!! That's the correct answer!" Black frost grabbed a gacha as big as a volley ball from the basket and tossed it at her. She opened it, the crowd watching eagerly, and pulled out a small statue of Kohryu.

"Oh," An older woman, perhaps the girl's grandmother, smiled brightly, "We can put this in the shrine of our bakery!"

The other older gentlemen nodded and as he patted his granddaughter's back, the girl smiling.

"Next!" Black Frost cackled, "This could be a head-scratcher, ho! This Shinto deity pacified Ashihara no Nakatsukuni and is the personification of a sword itself!”

“Any idea, sis?” Kaien whispered.

She sighed, “Nope.”

The crowd murmured. It took a minute for someone to raise their hand.

“Is it... Futsunushi?”

“Hee ho, correct!” Black Frost tossed the man a gacha, which was opened to reveal a high quality set of Phantom Thief themed tarot cards and posters.

“Dangit.” Kaori muttered under her breath.

The monk beside her hummed as Black Frost did a twirl.

“Next question, ho! She is the Hindu goddess of wealth, fortune, and beauty. The mother of Kama and close consort of Vishnu-”

The monk raised his hand, “Lakshmi.”

Black Frost threw up his fists, “Hee ho, correct! Wowie, how are all of you this smart, ho!?”

Laughter filtered through the crowd as Black Frost tossed a gacha towards the monk, who caught it easily. The monk’s fox-like smile widened as he offered it to Kaori.

Her mouth dropped, “A-are you sure?”

“I insist.”

She took it and popped it open, eyes going wide at the large Byakko plush inside. It had a silver chain around its neck with a bag of Joker charms and pins.

Kaori beamed, "Thank you so much!"

The old man laughed as they turned away from Black Frost's growing crowd, "It's no trouble. What are you two going to do until the finale?"

"Let's see..." Kaien whipped out a colorful map of the Festival Grounds from his back pocket, "There are plenty of Joker's tents to visit yet, or we could... no, 1-A's concert would be over by now. Uh, there's 1-B's play, 1-C's haunted house, or there's a beauty pageant later. Oh! The business and support courses are working together to show off the gear they made?"

Kaori sighed as she hugged the massive Byakko plush, "I kinda want to wander around until we get hungry enough to find the Blue Lotus."

Kaien shrugged, "Works for me!"

"Do you want to continue together?" The monk asked, "I find myself enjoying your company."

Kaori grinned as she pointed in a random direction, "Let's all go together!!"

Kaien and the monk laughed as they followed her lead.

"Thanks, Joker."

"No problem." Ren smirked as he set down a plate of curry and a cup of coffee in front of a familiar police officer, "Though you could just call me Ren at this point. Right, Haru-san?"

Haru-san beamed from the other side of the table, "Of course, Ren dear."

Kaname chuckled, "Alright, thanks Ren."

“Did you want to go in the back of the tent? I'm sure Risumi and Ayumu would love to talk to you more.”

“They're busy.” Kaname smiled at the line cutting through the clearing, “And... I wouldn't want to upset them.”

Haru-san frowned as she held the cup of tea Ren offered her, “Oh, they wouldn't be upset.”

Ren exchanged a look with Haru-san, “You tried to save their lives when Overhaul and Shigaraki took them, and you were a regular long before that. Why would they be upset?”

“I don't want them feeling guilty.” Kaname scooted back in his chair and rapped his knuckles on his left leg, sounding of plastic and metal instead of flesh. “It'll be a few months before I can get back to work in my condition.”

“Oh, dear...” Haru-san patted Kaname's arm, “They wouldn't feel guilty. They were so happy to see you here.”

“I could heal you?” Ren stated, eyes wide in horror, “You wouldn't have to wear the prosthetic and could get back to your normal life.”

Kaname shook his head, “I appreciate the offer, but I'll have to turn you down.”

“But-”

“No buts.” He pinned Ren with a stern look, “I'm a grown man who can handle the consequences of his own choices. Don't put it on yourself to try and fix it, okay?”

Ren grimly nodded.

Kaname grinned and waved him away, “Go on, then.”

Haru-san clutched his sleeve with the warmest expression to melt Ren's lingering horror, “I'll keep an eye on this one. Don't you worry, dear.”

“Thanks, Haru-san.”

Ren left them in peace to rejoin the chaos in the tent.

“Oh, you’re back!” Risumi placed the overstuffed tip-jar in his hands, “Can you empty this out?”

“Again? How many does this make?”

“Eighteen!” The woman was giddy as she fanned herself, “Eighteen times the tip jar was filled! Can you believe it? The donations online are crazy high, too!”

Ren smirked, “I’ll sort it out in the back.”

Risumi continued the battle at the front counter while Ren took the tip jar into the kitchen. Ayumu and Lunch Rush didn’t notice him as they worked like whirlwinds around the stoves and ovens to create culinary masterpieces for their guests.

Fafnir moved his tail to reveal the safe hidden behind it, “I’m bored, Trickster! I thought there would be more action!”

“I admit the same. I’ve memorized everything I need in the Compendium, Trickster.” Lavenza said as she watched Ren open the safe, “It’s dizzying watching the other Strength work so hard.”

“If you’re bored, Lavenza, you could help me do this.”

“Very well.” Lavenza hopped down from the crates and straightened her dress.

Fafnir yawned as Ren showed her how to sort the bills and store them safely away in the small vault. The fortune inside grew into tens of thousands of yen already, and Ren had no idea how much they’d make by the end of it.

“How long until your finale, Trickster?” Lavenza asked as he closed the safe, “The Metaverse presence continues to strengthen.”

Ren set the empty jar aside and reached into his apron pockets for his phone, “A few hours yet. If the readings keep going up like they are now, then our plan should go off without a hitch.”

He checked Gentle Criminal and La Brava’s stream. They were currently free-falling from the magical wind tunnels in Cybele’s tent. Somehow, Gentle Criminal sat cross-legged and floated serenely with a porcelain cup in hand, looking much like a distinguished gentleman having a calm afternoon tea. Other people in the background weren’t so lucky, though laughter and excited yells echoed as they spun around and flapped their arms like frantic birds.

Cybele’s amusement trickled through their bond as she floated up behind Gentle Criminal to wave at the camera, directed at him.

Fafnir shot up, drawing his eyes away from the stream.

Ren frowned, “What’s wrong?”

“Someone troubles the Strength.” Fafnir rolled his shoulders and languidly stretched, “Finally, my time to shine!”

Fafnir crawled out the back of the tent, the tip of his tail disappearing under the fabric.

Ren looked at Lavenza, “Stay here.”

Lavenza watched as he went to the front, where Risumi was being hounded by a blue skinned woman shoving a recording device in her personal bubble.

“Is it true you’ve known Joker’s secret identity long before anyone else!?”

Risumi remained stone-faced, “Please get down from the counter, miss.”

“What’s he like in his day-to-day life? Is he really as kind and generous as people claim, or is that just a front? You’ve must’ve seen his powers when he rescued you from Overhaul, so what was it like seeing it in person!?”

Ren pulled Risumi behind him. The blue woman gasped and sprawled fully over the counter to get closer, her long purple hair spilling over their side of the counter. The recording device was inches from Ren’s face.

“Joker, what’s it like being in U.A.? Do students and teachers treat you well despite your past crimes? Has anybody called you a murderer to your face? What made you turn yourself in? Do you have any plans to get your hero license and protect the people of this country as you did when you were a vigilante!?”

Ren smiled courteously, “Take your order or leave, miss. You’re holding up the line.”

“The line can wait when millions have been dying to hear your story! You’ve only dangled bits and pieces, but we need the whole thing!” Her black eyes turned feral, “I’ve never backed down from getting a good story, Joker, and you’ll be no different!”

“There’s a first time for everything.” Ren sighed, “This is your last chance, miss-”

“Kizuki Chitose.”

“Miss Kizuki.” Silver scales flickered nearby as other people backed away from the counter, “This is your last warning. Get off the counter, calmly take your order, or leave. I won’t ask again before I have you removed.”

“You can’t remove me!” She cried, “I’m doing a service for the people of Japan!”

“Fafnir.”

Kizuki blinked as a large shadow fell over her. She looked over her shoulder as Fafnir stared down at her with his hollow black eyes, throat rumbling in a growl.

“Oh. My. GOSH!” Kizuki nearly put the recorder up Fafnir’s nose, “Which demon are you? Wait, you’re a new one, aren’t you? How does Joker get new demons with his quirk!? Does he have to do some creepy ritual like the rumors online say or-”

Fafnir lifted her off the counter by the back of her coat. Apparently, she wasn’t alone. Several men rushed from the crowd and tackled Fafnir, but he didn’t budge an inch.

“Escort them to the front gate and make sure they can’t get back inside.” Ren smoothly stated, loud enough for everyone to hear.

People leapt out of Fafnir’s way as he carried Kizuki by the scruff of her coat like a troublesome kitten who yowled all the way. Her cohorts refused to let Fafnir’s limbs go, so they were dragged along in the dirt. One man even dangled from Fafnir’s tail.

Ren placed his hands on the counter and leaned forward, his eyes turning to molten gold pools, “Does anyone else want to be disrespectful, or can we all be civil and get back in an orderly line?”

Having sensed the trouble, Kohryu swept over the clearing in all of his glory. The gentle sunlight suffocated in his shadow, the trees bent under the wind generated by him, and his ruby-red eyes narrowed dangerously at the crowd below. Gabriel’s wings fluttered as she descended from the dragon’s side and onto the tent canopy, her smile patient but wrathful.

Ren’s never seen such a large crowd form a neat line in less than 30 seconds. Nobody dared to argue or shove others when their spots were lost.

Ren nodded up to the pair of Personas, who took off to continue their duties. The relief was palpable as sunlight flooded the clearing and the trees returned to a normal rustle.

Risumi smiled at him, "Thanks for having my back, Ren. That woman was... persistent."

"We're a team, it's only natural. Are you okay?"

"Yes, I'm fine. I hope that's the last we've seen of her."

Ren smirked, "Fafnir just tossed them out on their backsides and told security not to let them in. They won't be coming back."

Her eyes twinkled and she brought up her hand for a high-five, which he reciprocated.

They continued working through the line in synchronized harmony.

"Kacchan! Where are you taking me?"

"Shut it, nerd." Bakugo scowled as dragged Midoriya by the wrist, "We just want to talk to you."

Midoriya sighed, but allowed his childhood friend to pull him behind the building they used for their concert. His eyes widened as he saw Yaoyorozu leaning on the wall, smiling when she heard their footsteps.

Bakugo let go and planted himself beside Yaoyorozu, arms crossed.

Midoriya looked between them, boggled, "Uh, what's this about?"

The odd duo nodded to one another.

"We know about the Red Rain happening today." Yaoyorozu said dutifully.

"You... you know ?"

“Yeah, we know!” Bakugo snapped, “Joker gave Ponytail and I individual ‘talks’ weeks ago. He must’ve talked with you when you went out to get that rope, right?”

Midoriya nodded. “How did you know?”

“We just... did. It seems there’s a certain spark in people who know the truth, for whatever reason.” Yaoyorozu clutched her chin, “Why don’t we share information so we can all get a clearer picture of what’s going on?”

“I... I guess?” Midoriya said.

Bakugo curtly nodded.

“We all know about the Red Rain, how about the mysterious blue door he can summon and the weapons he’s been making?”

“What?” Midoriya gaped.

Bakugo looked at her strangely too.

“Oh, did he... not share that bit with you?”

“Obviously not.” Bakugo rolled his eyes, “I was the first one he talked with. He told me about the Red Rain and the thing that’s causing this whole mess.”

Midoriya paled, “What is it? I... he told me about the Red Rain a-and some... other things.”

Bakugo stared into Midoriya’s eyes, “‘Yaldabaoth, God of Control’, said that he and his friends were fighting against it when it banished them here. Whatever the hell that means.”

A sour wind kicked up around them. They broke out in goosebumps as the breeze felt like the edges of razor blades caressing their skin.

“The Red Rain, a God Of Control, and... weapons?” Midoriya looked at Yaoyorozu, “Why was he making weapons ?”

“Apparently normal quirks and support gear wouldn’t work against the enemies that will appear in the USJ this time. He took copies of the base materials I made into the blue door and emerged with weapons forged from... his companions. A whip from Black Frost, a gun from Shiva.” She said, “Armor from Yatagarasu. Accessories too, though it was very strange.”

Bakugo raised a brow, “What was it?”

“It was a ring from Byakko, but... more than that. It was made of ice, and spread frost on Nezu’s desk. Nezu cut Joker off before he could reveal its purpose.”

“So,” Midoriya counted on his fingers, “We have the Red Rain happening during Joker’s Finale with armed heroes waiting at the USJ for unknown enemies. We have the name of Joker’s arch-nemesis. And then there’s that fact that Joker’s wor-”

“What?” Bakugo glared when Midoriya snapped his mouth shut, “He told you more, didn’t he?”

Midoriya hesitantly nodded, “It’s... difficult.”

Yaoyorozu frowned, “Nezu said the truth of Joker’s situation is stranger than fiction.”

Bakugo snarled, “What is it, Deku?”

“I... I can’t.” Midoriya shook his head.

“What do you mean you can’t? You agreed to share information so we know what’s going on!”

“Its... I...” Midoriya sighed as he ran a hand down his face, “The only thing I can say is that he once told me he wasn’t strong enough to protect the people he loves, that he feels like he failed and its probably this... 'God Of Control's' fault. That's all I can offer. Really, it's something Ren will have to tell you himself."

Yaoyorozu laid a firm hand on Bakugo's shoulder when he was about to protest. "I know we want answers, but we have to be patient with this. If its something we have to heard from Ren himself, then so be it."

Bakugo deflated with a sour scowl.

There was a moment of silence as they digested this information, only disturbed by the new voice right behind them.

"So, what are we going to do about it?"

The three of them jumped around to see Todoroki leaning against the wall with his arms crossed, expression deceptively passive if it weren't for the fire in his eyes. Iida stepped around the corner, looking pale and sweaty, though a sharp glint shined in his eyes, too. Kirishima followed another moment later, looking sheepish.

"Oi, this was a private meeting, you damn extras!" Bakugo snapped.

"How long have you been there?" Midoriya asked.

"Long enough to hear everything." Iida pushed up his glasses.

"I saw Bakugo dragging you away, Midoriya." Todoroki said.

"Iida and I saw it too! And we thought... well," Kirishima rubbed the back of his neck, "We didn't want you guys to get in trouble from another fight, you know? Especially on such a fun day!"

Iida nodded, "But it turns out it was something different altogether, though even more horrifying."

"We don't know anything about Aniki's pain at all, do we?" Kirishima stated, his eyes watering, "If Aniki is hurting, or if he's in some sort of trouble, then we have to do something, right!?"

“You guys...” Midoriya whispered.

Todoroki’s frown deepened, “It would be an insult to not help him for a change.”

“We could go ask him.” Yaoyorozu suggested.

Midoriya shook his head, “I offered, and he said they have it handled for now.”

“Still,” Kirishima brightly grinned, “Even if we can’t help out this time, that doesn’t mean we can’t go show our support now! That way he knows we’ll have his back in the future, no matter what!”

Midoriya bit his lip, “I suppose it can’t hurt?”

Yaoyorozu smiled, “That’s a sound plan.”

“Whatever.” Bakugo growled.

Todoroki pulled himself from the wall, “We should check the Blue Lotus.”

The six of them walked around the building and didn’t get far before Ashido saw them.

“There you are!” She rushed over to them, “The whole class is going to the Blue Lotus to celebrate a job well done! Wanna come!?”

They exchanged significant glances and followed her. Others in their class joined in, still riled up from the end of the concert. Then, Bakugo froze when the sky suddenly changed colors.

Reds, yellows, greens, and purples washed over the blue of the sky. Kohryu and an angel soared over them, raining down waterfalls of light in every color.

The whole class only relaxed as the sky returned to normal.

Ashido's laugh drained away the tension, "Wow, who knew we were still so jumpy about you-know-what?"

"Yeah, I feel silly!" Hagakure waved her arms.

"Let's not bring that up." Shoji said.

"I agree." Kyoka fidgeted with her ear jacks, "I want to forget it ever happened."

Tokoyami pulled his jacket tighter around himself, eyes darting as his feathers bristled.

Midoriya and the others kept silent. They walked through the grove of trees and into the sprawling opening containing the Blue Lotus. Crowds of people huddled around tables as familiar mouth-watering scents danced on a breeze.

Ashido gasped, "Joker!!"

Shinsou and Amamiya gaped as the whole class approached the counter.

Amamiya smirked, "This won't be another awkward staring contest, right?"

"N-no way, dude!" Kirishima pumped up his fists, "We're here for your awesome food! I haven't had your brownies in months !"

"We have plenty of those and more." Shinsou gestured towards the glass display, "Take a look and order when you're ready."

Kaminari, Ashido, and Sero lunged towards the display and put their faces on the glass. Others like Shoji, Koda, and Tokoyami carefully studied the chalk signs. Ojiro and Hagakure kept to the back of the group, whispering between themselves.

Uraraka pointed to a large jar on the counter, "What's this?"

“We’re taking donations to rebuild the Blue Lotus.” Shinsou frowned, “We have to rebuild from the ground up, so any amount helps.”

“Have you hired anyone to build it yet?”

“No. Why?”

“Um...” Uraraka bunched her hands into fists, “I need to make a call. Be right back!”

Uraraka sprinted out of the clearing.

“What was that about?” Amamiya asked.

“Your guess is as good as ours, kero.” Asui said, staring at the tea section of the sign, “But I have a feeling she’ll be back soon.”

The others began to take their orders, but Bakugo’s eyes narrowed at one option circled in red chalk.

“I want that.”

Amamiya blinked, “That’s the spiciest option we have. Are you sure?”

“I can handle anything you throw at me!”

“If you say so.” Amamiya said with amusement.

The working pair wrote down the remaining orders and the class scattered to find seating... except for a particular group who stared at Amamiya.

Amamiya curiously tilted his head at them, “Is there something else?”

“We need to talk to you.” Todoroki stated.

“Alone.” Yaoyorozu added.

Iida chopped an arm, "It's important!"

"I promise it'll be quick!" Kirishima stated.

Midoriya planted on a nervous smile.

"Go on." Shinsou said, "I can handle these orders."

Amamiya nodded and gestured for them to follow him to the back, far away from any eavesdroppers. He emerged from the shadows of the tent, footsteps silent.

"What's this about?"

"We know about the Red Rain." Todoroki stated.

Amamiya deadpanned at the other three, "Really?"

"IcyHot, Shitty Hair, and Glasses eavesdropped when Ponytail and I wanted to talk with Deku." Bakugo muttered.

"We were just exchanging information to get a clear picture, so we'll know in case something goes wrong." Yaoyorozu said as she politely bowed, "We promise it was nothing heinous."

Amamiya looked at Midoriya, "They don't know...?"

"No!" Midoriya waved his arms, "I only told them what you shared about the Red Rain! But they already knew."

"And about the thing you were fighting." Bakugo growled.

"Also of the weapons you've made..." Yaoyorozu clasped her hands together, "It doesn't paint a very good picture of what will happen at the USJ."

"You want to do... what exactly? You can't fight Shadows unarmed." Amamiya said, "The heroes have it covered. I'll be there when it happens, too."

Kirishima mouthed 'Shadows?' to Todoroki, who shrugged.

"Maybe not this time." Iida stared Amamiya in the eye with indiscernible emotions, "However, we refuse to let you go on without our aid and support! We'll stand by your side when the time comes for us all to fight together!!"

"Damn right! You better not leave us out or I'll kick your ass!" Bakugo snapped.

"Yeah! Er, without the ass kicking part!" Kirishima stepped forward and wrapped his arms around Amamiya, the latter stiffening. He stepped back, hands locked on Amamiya's shoulders as his eyes watered, "You've been suffering for so long, and I won't let my Aniki shoulder this alone anymore! I'll gladly step up and fight for you! After all, what kind of heroes would we be if we just ignored our friend's pain!?"

Todoroki scratched his cheek, "I agree."

Midoriya and Yaoyorozu nodded.

"You guys... I... Thank you." Amamiya's shock washed away with a genuine smile. "I'll talk with Nezu, but when the time comes I'd be glad to have you all watching my back."

"Yes!" Kirishima threw his arms to the sky, "You can leave it to us, man!"

Iida bowed, "It's the least we can do!"

"We've said what we needed to." Yaoyorozu said gently, "We should return before we're missed."

Amamiya's smile lingered on them before he disappeared inside the tent. They reached the front counter to witness Uraraka bowing a full 90 degrees, holding out a business card with both hands to Shinsou. Amamiya had just rejoined her.

“M-my parents own a construction company,” Uraraka stated, “I-I just called them and told them everything you’ve done to help me, w-with the free meals and all, a-and they agreed to give you a good discount because of it! Please consider hiring them!! They’re very good at what they do, I promise!”

Shinsou put her hand over her mouth, “Oh... I don’t know what to say.”

Amamiya nudged her, “You should accept it.”

“Yes.” Shinsou took the card and bowed, “We’ll be sure to give them a call soon!”

Uraraka had stars in her eyes as she stood to her full height, “Thank you so much!”

“No, thank you, dear.” Shinsou chuckled, “I can’t wait to tell my husband! Do you want your usual curry order, sweetie? It’ll be on the house for you!”

“Y-yes, please!”

Amamiya winked at their group before he started gathering their orders together.

They went to sit with their class, who pushed some unused tables together. Piles of food were already scattered everywhere, some shamelessly stuffing their faces while others took more than a few seconds to savor the flavors.

“Where’d you guys go?” Ashido questioned as she shoved a fork-full of cake in her mouth. “That’s the second time you all disappeared!”

“None of your damn business, Raccoon Eyes! And don’t talk with your mouth full!”

“We simply had a word with Amamiya!” Iida said, “Nothing more!”

“Ooooh, did you guys share a secret!?” Hagakure asked. “Tell us!”

Iida fervently chopped his arm, “I would never betray a friend’s trust for gossip!!”

“You pretty much just confirmed that it’s a secret.” Kyouka stated.

Asui tilted her head curiously. Uraraka had sat next to her, humming to herself in happiness. Amamiya descended on their table with the last of their goods. They all shamelessly stared as he passed the food around, and Todoroki blinked at the red and white milkshake set in front of him.

“What’s this? I didn’t order it.”

Amamiya smirked at Midoriya, who sputtered, “A peppermint milkshake. On the house.”

“Oh.” Todoroki took it and sipped on the straw, “It’s good.”

Bakugo rolled his eyes as a plate with a bright red curry bun was placed in front of him.

“Good luck.” Amamiya said, “Over 40 people have tried so far, and I’ve had to heal all of them because they couldn’t handle it.”

Bakugo picked it up, stared Amamiya dead in the eyes, and took a massive bite.

Amamiya gaped as Bakugo chewed slowly.

“Finally .” Bakugo said with a sharp smirk, “Something with a decent kick!”

Amamiya’s laugh echoed through the clearing, “We finally have a winner! Congrats on being the first to get bragging rights, Bakugo.”

“Those other losers must’ve been too weak. This is easy!”

“Oooh! Lemme try!” Kaminari made grabby hands for it. Bakugo snapped at him as they wrestled until Kaminari snatched it.

“Oi!” Bakugo shot up from his chair as Kaminari took the second bite, and froze .

The whole class went silent, watching as Kaminari’s eyes watered and his face became as red as a cherry.

“Hot, hot HOOOT!” He tossed the curry bun away and wailed.
“Everything’s on fire! I’m gonna dieeeeeee!!”

Amamiya sighed as Kaminari flopped on the ground, gasping for air. He snapped his fingers and summoned beautiful lights weaving around them. Kaminari stopped flailing as the lights faded, eyes going wide.

“Oh, it’s gone.”

Bakugo stomped over to Kaminari and lifted him by the front of his shirt, “That was mine, Dunceface! You owe me another!”

“O-okay okay! You can have it!”

“Coming right up.” Amamiya walked away with an amused smirk.

Ashido fanned herself as she watched him go, “Ah, just like old times at the Blue Lotus.”

“It’s nostalgic, kero.” Asui said, “I wonder if we can continue having good times like these after the Blue Lotus is rebuilt.”

“Do you think he’ll still work at the Blue Lotus?” Uraraka pulled back her sleeves before she tucked into her curry, revealing a black and red handkerchief tied around her wrist. Her classmates knew that, for some reason, she’d always kept it somewhere on her person. The only exception was hero training so it wouldn’t get damaged, “I mean, if he doesn’t get a hero license or anything?”

“Maybe!” Kirishima said over his half-eaten brownie, “Even if he becomes a hero down the line, I’m sure he’ll keep making curry!”

Midoriya stared down at his food, willing his eyes not to water to little success. The grip on his spoon nearly snapped it in half.

Bakugo noticed the sudden change, stopping his throttling of Kaminari to narrow his eyes. Todoroki noticed too, his frown deepening.

Amamiya dropped by to deliver Bakugo’s second curry bun, but was whisked away because a new flood of people came into the clearing.

Bakugo and Todoroki shared a look as Midoriya watched Amamiya return to the counter, almost wistfully. Like the other boy would disappear if he wasn’t watching.

Whatever lost piece of the puzzle Midoriya knew, it wasn’t good.

Eventually, the class devoured their exquisite dishes before splitting to explore the Cultural Festival at its fullest.

Ren nursed a cup of coffee, keeping in his relieved sigh as his magic reserves restored themselves.

An hour and a half had passed since the crazy lunch crowd, and they were taking a much needed break. Fafnir dozed nearby and Lavenza was polishing off her third piece of strawberry shortcake. Risumi and Ayumu stood together by the counter while Lunch Rush decided to go take a walk around the grove to stretch his legs.

Risumi leaned against a counter, eyeing him, “I feel bad that you’re working through the Festival.”

“Don’t worry about it. I’ve pretty much lived it through my Personas.” As well as he could through several wild perspectives all stretching between the long hours of work, but Ren said it with an easy smile, “I wouldn’t trade it for anything.”

She laughed, “If you ever want to work with us again after the Blue Lotus is rebuilt, you just need to say so. There’ll always be a place for you there.”

“Oh.” Ren couldn’t hold eye contact with either of them, “R-right.”

Risumi and Ayumu exchanged worried glances.

“Hey...” Ren looked up as Ayumu pinned him with concern, “Is there something you’re not telling us? You always go quiet when we talk about the future, ever since we’ve been at U.A.”

Risumi approached him and held his face in her soft hands, her smile so warm and patient. It was one of the things he’d miss the most.

“Please tell us if there’s something wrong.” She said, “Was it something we did?”

“No!” Ren shook his head, “It’s just... I... It’s hard to explain.”

“Then you don’t have to tell us right now. We’ll wait until you’re ready, okay?”

“... Okay. Thank you.”

Risumi sagely nodded as her hands dropped.

Thankfully, the tightness in his heart didn’t last.

“Ren-ni!”

Ren turned to the tent’s back entrance, gasping as Eri rushed towards him with the biggest and brightest smile he’d ever seen, striking him like the very first sunlight on his face after a ravaging storm. That smile had burned away the shadows in her heart.

“Eri...”

She crashed into him, hugging his legs before jumping back in unbridled excitement. He crouched in front of her as she bounced in place, eyes glimmering like jewels, “It was so cool Ren-ni! The concert was all WOOOO and AHHHH!” She dramatically inhaled, “Then after we went we went ice-skating AND I was the only one to answer one of Black Frost’s questions because the answer was Ishtar and-” She reached on the top of her head, where a new black and gold Joker mask sat, “I won this all by myself!! Are you proud of me?”

She froze, her dropping smile was a crime against nature, “Ren-ni? Why are you crying?”

“What?” Ren blinked at his blurry vision, and rubbed them away with the ends of his sleeve, “I’m okay, you’ve made me the proudest big brother there ever was.”

Her smile returned like a warm breath of spring after a brutal winter.

“I told you he’d cry too!”

Ren looked up to Morgana sitting on Kaito’s shoulder. Mirio was with them, eyes watery but smile equally as bright.

“Oh, you must all be famished!” Risumi clapped her hands together, her expression also teary, “We have a lot of curry and so many delicious treats yet! Eri-chan, do you want to pick something out?”

Her stomach rumbled, “Yes, please!”

Ren watched Eri hold hands with Risumi as they went to where the leftovers were stored.

He looked at Mirio when they were out of earshot, “Thanks for doing this.”

Mirio laughed and waved a hand at him, "It was no trouble! I wanted to see her smile too!"

"It was so crowded, but..." Kaito crossed his arms, "It was worth it for her."

"Totally!" Morgana held himself with pride, "I'm so happy for her!"

At that moment, Ren's phone sounded an alarm. He reached into his pocket to silence it as everyone looked at him.

Morgana sighed as he hopped over to Ren's shoulder, "We came back just in time."

"What do you mean?" Mirio asked.

"It's time to start my preparations for the finale." Ren said as he stored his phone away, "Can the both of you do me one last favor?"

Kaito raised a brow, "What?"

"Sure thing!" Mirio grinned.

"Make sure Eri's at the front of the crowd before the gate to my tent opens? I have one more surprise for her." He gave a significant look to Ayumu, who smirked and reached into a cupboard and took out a small container.

"What kind of surprise?" Mirio asked as Ren took it.

"It wouldn't be a surprise if I told you, now would it?" Ren stated.
"She'll love it, don't worry."

Eri and Risumi walked back as Ren took off his apron and set it on a hook, somehow the action felt... final. As if this was the very last time he'd ever work with Risumi or Ayumu. His hand lingered on the fabric, ingraining every small detail of the Blue Lotus apron until slowly, he let it go.

“Where are you going?” Eri asked as she held a plate with a brownie.

“The finale starts soon.” He knelt in front of her again, grinning, “You’ll be able to watch your big brother be really cool. Think you can cheer me on from the stands?”

“O-Of course! I’ll be extra loud so you can hear me!”

Ren patted her head, “That’s my girl.”

“Good luck.” Kaito said as they left the tent.

Morgana took a deep breath as the Blue Lotus faded behind them, Fafnir and Lavenza keeping pace at their side, “This is it, isn’t it?”

“Our whole operation hinges on this. Not intimidating in the slightest.”

“I have every faith we’ll pull it off, Trickster.” Lavenza said as she hugged the Compendium, “Both the Magician and I will be there to support you.”

“Yeah,” Morgana smirked as the largest tent on campus loomed over them, “Let’s do this, Leader!”

“Right!”

Hawks watched Gentle Criminal end his stream in front of the Grand Finale tent. Tens of thousands of people have tuned in at one point or another.

“Gentle Criminal’s livestream is over.” He reported as his wings fluttered, hovering high within the USJ, “It shouldn’t be much longer.”

“Indeed!” Nezu’s chipper voice came through his comm, “The readings just need one more push to be where we want them.”

“Understood.”

Hawks saw Margaret, way down at the fountain, take a phone from her pocket. Apparently, one of Joker's old phones was the key to this whole mess. Hawks didn't fully understand what was going to happen, though as the hours tumbled by, the air grew thick as if some invisible force was trying to smother them.

That foulness climbed down their throats and infected their very beings with an oily slime. He tasted static on his tongue and a buzzing drone drilled into the back of his mind like tv static.

Hawks hissed as the air churned again, sending a chilling ripple through his feathers and making his teeth itch.

"You feel that?" Miruko asked, her tone serious.

"There's certainly something here." Ectoplasm replied.

"Of course there is!" Spinner yelled, "Joker wouldn't lie!"

"Merp!"

"Agreed." Mr. Compress stated, his tone bordering on protective venom.

"Prepare yourselves," Nezu ordered, "Joker is about to begin the finale. We need to be ready for anything."

"Understood!" Many voices called.

Hawks put his phone away and unstrapped the impressive grenade launcher named 'Yagrush' from his back. His utility belts and jacket pockets were full of elemental bombs and healing items. The Spiral Inferno Ring on his right pointer finger, a charred black band made from Moloch, filled his veins with boiling fire ready to burn his enemies to a crisp.

His job was to be the air support along with Ryukyu, who's steady wing beats echoed as she circled the USJ, on her back were Nighteye and Nezu to direct everyone when needed. The thick air seemed to make it harder for her to fly, as she took longer and longer to make a full circle as the hours counted down.

The air above the fountain moved like heatwaves as another spike of strange distortion struck their bodies. It was like trying to breathe through a thick cotton blanket strapped over your face.

Hawks smirked as the strength of Joker's soul flooded his body like hot magma, burning the darkest parts of his heart away.

A sea of faces waited around the massive tent, only being held off by some small robots keeping a space clear in front of the great black gate. As the crowd swelled, so did their excitement. It was palpable on the air, clear in the eyes of those who believed in Joker with all of their hearts.

Fireworks and smoke shot up around the entrance as boisterous laughter echoed from the sky, silence washed through the crowd as a figure stood at the top of the tent. With an agile leap he dropped down, stomachs and jaws plummeted as he neared the hard ground. He flipped into a vibrant green tornado that sprang from nowhere, cushioning his fall as he landed in the center of the clearing.

Bright ripples of color cascaded from his boots as he stood, his confident grin big enough for all to see. Not a peep was made as he walked forward, footsteps echoing like war drums. The robots parted as he reached the edge of the crowd to kneel in front of a little girl with long white hair and a black Joker mask on her head.

He put a hand on his heart and bowed to her like a knight would to a princess, the box under his arm visible as he held it out to her.

She took it and popped it open, her smile were rays of sunlight as she took out a bright red candied apple larger than a man's fist. Joker winked at her before he flipped away to the center of the clearing, holding his arms out as his voice boomed across the grounds.

“Welcome, one and all, to the Grand Finale of the Festival!” He did a showman’s bow, a breeze surrounding him made his coat tails flare dramatically, “Come inside and witness the awesome powers and mysteries of the Cirque Des Dieux... if you dare.”

He threw down a smoke bomb. A sharp wind blew it away seconds later, but Joker was nowhere in sight. Silver chains rattled and fell away from the gate, which began to creak open of their own volition. Robots darted inside as the black gate yawned to its widest, revealing the inviting darkness to lure people inside.

...

Meanwhile, several forms dove out of the Velvet Room door placed in the corridor leading out to the main stage.

“That was great!” Mona cheered, “You looked so cool, Joker!”

“What a masterful opening, Trickster.” Lavenza said as she tucked the Compendium under her arm, several bookmarks stuck out of it in preparation for the finale.

“Thanks.” Joker looked out to the main stage, “But we’re only getting started, so let’s not pat ourselves on the back just yet.”

“Oh, give yourself some credit.” La Brava’s voice came in from the comm in his ear, “That was amazing and you know it!”

Joker chuckled, “How’s it looking outside?”

“People are flooding in like we hoped.” Gentle Criminal said, “It won’t be long before your show can start in earnest.”

“Yeah, but we’ll have to stay on our toes. The Metaverse readings are dangerously high.”

“All according to plan.” Joker said, “I told Margaret to activate it as soon as possible after my show starts, the longer we keep people in here the better.”

La Brava hummed, “Hey...”

“What is it?” Mona asked.

“No matter what happens, whether good or bad... I’ll always be grateful we were partners in crime.”

Joker’s heart swelled, “La Brava...”

“I second that.” Gentle Criminal stated, his voice adding to the warmth in Joker’s chest, “I would’ve been a shallow husk of my current self, no doubt spreading more harm than good, without your humbling lessons! It’s thanks to you and Mona that we got so far. We’ll be with you until the very end.”

“Yeah! So let’s tackle this Grand Finale like the kickass team we are!!”

Joker and Mona laughed, with the former putting a hand over his eyes when they suddenly felt watery, “If you two make me cry right before I go on stage, I swear...”

La Brava chuckled, “You’ll love us anyway.”

“... You’re right.”

“The last of the crowd have gone inside, Joker.” Gentle Criminal said, his jovial demeanor bleeding away into a resolved poise, “La Brava and I will begin our duties posthaste!”

Mona’s ears twitched as the sound of thousands of footsteps filtered into their hallway. Eventually the dull drone of conversation washed over the footsteps like a wave, people were finding their seats and the air tasted of anticipation.

Joker's smirked as he pulled on his gloves, "It's Showtime!"

"I can't believe we get seats so close to the stage!" Risumi whispered as they found their designated chairs. "Nezu was so kind to reserve them for us."

"I don't know if I'd call it close." Ayumu said, squinting, "We can barely see anything."

"It's part of the mystery!" Mirio's smile was somehow brighter than the flaming sconces providing just enough dim light to see where they were going, but the center stage remained cloaked by a nebulous void, "I can't wait to see what Joker has in store!"

"What does Cirque Des Dieux even mean?" Hitoshi asked as he plopped down beside his mother. "I forgot to ask Joker."

"I-It means 'Circus Of The Gods' in French!"

They stared at Eri as she hopped up next to Kaito, munching on her candied apple.

"How do you know?" Risumi asked, astonished.

"Joker and Mr. Compress have been teaching her French." Kaito said, his eyes focused on the blackness before them, "Joker's added small tidbits in other languages, too."

Eri took another bite of her apple, oblivious to the shock traded by others, when suddenly, the flaming sconces sputtered before going dark.

Hitoshi wasn't the only one to hold his breath, his heart pounding over the dead silence soaking the stadium. Then, a spark in the center of the stage. Hitoshi's breath caught in his throat as the tiny smudge of light exploded to a rising column of blue flame illuminating everything with deep sapphire shades and inky black shadow.

A massive dark form appeared within, as big as a building, and the flames parted before the veritable demon lord who descended upon Kamino. Satanael lifted his open hand, and in his palm stood Joker in all of his royal splendor, his eyes glowing like golden lamps in contrast to the vibrant blue cinders swirling around him.

“You’ve chosen to leave the world you know and brave into the unknown veils of the realms beyond. Well done.” Joker’s magnified voice struck everyone deep in their hearts, “You’re not afraid of the unusual-”

A second star blazed on one of the raised stages, the flames vanished with a beat of leathery wings. A woman with a skull for a face rode on a multi-headed dragon, raising her golden goblet as spears of ice grew around her.

“-The ethereal-”

Ishtar and Orpheus Picaro appeared on another platform in a forlorn dance, floating serenely as if they were underwater. Orpheus Picaro struck the strings of his lyre and sent out weaving musical notes of light over the crowd. Ishtar languidly spun in place and sent out her own spiraling aurora like a lover’s call lost to time.

“-And the unfathomable .”

Many in the audience felt their blood chill as a little girl emerged from the shadows on another platform, her grin too wide as macabre power writhed in an aura of death. Another rose next to her, an incomprehensible mass of squirming tentacles made of the void itself.

“Now, before we transcend above this world and into the domain of the gods, let’s give one last rousing cheer with a motto you all know by heart. Take it away, Black Frost!”

Black Frost appeared on the highest platform with a fiery twirl, “Hee ho, Go beyond-”

“PLUS ULTRA!!”

...

Thousands of voices cheered as the stage went dark once more.

“That was so cool!” Awase pumped his fists.

“As expected for a Phantom Thief,” Monoma sighed forlornly as he sulked in his chair, “But I wish he watched our play.”

“You’re still upset about that?” Kendo asked.

“‘Romeo, Juliet, and the Prisoner of Azkaban: The Return of the Kings’ was our magnum opus! It was so much better than what those posers at 1-A could do!”

“Joker wasn’t at 1-A’s concert either.” Awase chipped in, “Word is he’s been at the Blue Lotus all day, working.”

Monoma savagely grinned, “Well, I suppose that’s good enough for me. At least we have the honor of watching Joker perform now.”

“I’m hoping Seth appears.” Tsuburaba said, “Nobody’s seen him in ages!”

“There are rumors Joker doesn’t have him anymore,” Reiko’s soft voice was barely audible over the roar of the crowd. “Because he hasn’t appeared since the Summer Camp.”

“Awww man,” Honenuki sighed, “Seth was so cool. I wonder what happened?”

Pillars of holy light erupted around the stage, expunging the darkness as four heavenly forms orbited each other. Right below them on the main stage stood Joker. All the other deities from before were gone. Only a few were perceptive enough to see the light blue glow on Michael's body.

"Archangel Gabriel and... that armor, that spear..." Ibara gasped as she placed her hands together in a prayer, "Could it be Archangel Michael? Uriel and Raphael, too?"

"He even has Archangels !?" Tetsutetsu yelled.

"Shh!" Kendo waved her hand at him.

The angels lifted their weapons in sync to Joker raising his own archaic dagger. Joker sliced towards the beams of light, the angels' weapons clashing together with a teeth-chattering hum of metal.

"Open, Gates Of Heaven!" Joker ordered.

The audience gasped as the light pillars collapsed like waterfalls. Cascading waves flooded the floor around the stage, rippling and flowing in liquid gold, and from the lake, birds of all shapes and sizes arose in the thousands. The living golden forms of swans, swallows, parrots, doves, and more flew together in a mesmerizing tornado, their sweeping feathers leaving trails of light in their wake.

With a wave of Joker's hand, the birds split off and began flying over the audience. Cries of joy echoed through the stadium, as one by one, the birds descended upon certain people.

A dove landed in front of a little girl who had secretly lost her life in the Musutafu fires, revived by Joker's hand.

A mighty eagle circled a support student whose family finally received justice and the courage to move on.

The unlikely pair of a crow and a hummingbird chose two children who had suffered greatly at the hands of others, but through their sibling bond with Joker they've learned to live their lives to the fullest.

1-B flinched back in their chairs as one of the largest birds swooped over them in a great span of feathers as large as a man. The peacock raised its head in a keening cry so beautiful it made tears spring into their eyes, unbidden. Its fiery feathers splayed wonderfully as it lowered itself and stared right into Monoma, the boy's jaw dropped as a wave of calm and undeniable warmth flooded into his heart. Kindness and compassion reflected within the bird's fiery white eyes.

He reached up. The moment his fingers brushed the living light, his body glowed and the bird dissipated into streams of light around him. The flame within his heart roared louder as the fatigue from the day washed away, and new strength and vigor filled his being to near bursting. And not only that, it was like this piece of heaven wrapped its arms around his hurting soul and soothed all of the barbed pain and anxieties he's accumulated over the years.

Similar events happened all over the stadium until the birds were gone. Another round of deafening cheers, claps, and heartfelt cries sounded through the tent. Joker and his Archangels deeply bowed before the 'Gates Of Heaven' disappeared and the stage went dark once again.

Monoma collapsed in his chair, expression in shock at the overwhelming sense of relief and freedom taking root within him. Monoma didn't even notice as the tears dropped onto his pants like a steady rain.

"Monoma, a-are you okay?" Kinoko asked as tears ran down her cheeks.

When he didn't answer, Kendo placed a hand on his shoulder, "Monoma?"

"O-Of course I am! Never better!" Monoma sniffled and wiped his eyes, "Did... did any of those birds land by 1-A?"

“Uh...” Nirengeki cleared his throat as his voice cracked, “Two, I think? An owl and a crane. I didn’t see who they chose though.”

“Oh...”

For once, Monoma didn’t mind being one-upped by his sister class.

...

Class 1-A weren’t the only ones to marvel at the Master of the Cirque Des Dieux, his prowess over every element, and of the gods, demons, and mythical deities who followed his every whim.

Cerberus and Byakko performed an epic ballad of fire, lava, and glistening glaciers of ice and snow. Todoroki studied every blaze and freeze with a critical eye, taking note that Byakko had an odd underglow of blue around his body. A few did, actually. Every time the stage went dark the being with the blue glow had changed, as if the blackness allowed Joker make some invisible preparations before his next acts.

Kaminari violently shook Kyouka next to him when a dance of wind and lightning were next, with Joker calling down controlled tornadoes and thunderstorms with Cybele, Odin, Baal, and Shiva.

“Do you think I can be that cool too!?”

“Oi, knock it off!” Kyouka jabbed at him with her earjacks, “Of course you can, idiot! But just stop shaking me!”

Fire. Ice. Lightning. Wind.

Common elements among quirks.

But the next display reached into the realms of the unknown. Fafnir, Titania, Hastur, and another pair never seen before. One, a man with painted purple skin wearing a scarlet robe, in his hand he dangled a moving puppet on strings. The other, a floating stone coffin cracked open to reveal a single glowing eye and long horn, a terrible clawed hand reaching out from the abyss inside its own tomb.

At Joker's command there were booming pops of cosmic blue fireworks over the stage, followed by mind-bending flows of neon colors that pulled at what a normal mind could comprehend. Bursts of cursed black energy broke through the blinding colors like a cracking mirror. The hypnotizing display ended with Hastur summoning eyes from the darkest voids of space, which opened and shot multicolored beams in some semblance of a laser show.

With a bow from Joker and his mythical entourage, the stage faded to black once more.

"I never thought it would be this wild." Kyouka said as the next round of applause rang in their ears. "He's never showed off some of these crazy powers before!"

"I can't even imagine what he'll do for the finale." Sato nodded in agreement. "Not to mention his er... new friends." Hagakure said, "Like who was that creepy guy with the puppet? That scary demon in the coffin? That black tentacle thing!?"

"Fellow denizens of the darkness, perhaps?" Tokoyami tried to ignore Dark Shadow's writhing. His partner had been restless all day, filling him with churning oil and shadows playing with his mind, "My guesses could range from Nebiros to Belial, to any of the 72 demons of the Goetia. As for the void made solid, Dark Shadow reveres it with such fervor that its like nothing like I've ever felt from him before. I wonder if its not one of the mad dreaming gods of H.P. Lovecraft..."

"Uh..." Sero blinked, "We'll just pretend we totally have an idea of what you're talking about, dude."

"Quiet!" Iida chopped his hand, "Its starting again!"

“You’re the one yelling, Class Rep!” Ashido snarked back.

Alice, Fafnir, and Hastur materialized on various platforms on the stage, but Joker was nowhere to be seen until a bright blue blaze drew peoples’ eyes to the ceiling high above. Their guts wrenched in fear as Joker fearlessly balanced in the middle of a tight-rope with no harness. A fall from that height would be fatal.

“How did he get up there so fast?” Yaoyorozu clasped a hand over her mouth, eyes wide.

“Gruuuuuegh.....”

A growl shook their chairs, and the stadium went wild as Kohryu shot out from the darkness, his scales glowing from the brightly colored orbs he held in each paw.

Joker held out his arms as Kohryu closed in, and fell backwards.

There were more than a few visceral screams as Joker plummeted head first to a swift death.

Ashido gasped and covered her eyes, “Oh, I can’t watch!!” She said, obviously peeking through her fingers.

Joker shot out a grapple as Kohryu flew near, swinging as it caught Kohryu’s horn. Joker’s wide smirk could be seen as he soared right over their heads. They circled over everyone once before navy blue aurora flowed through the tent, and the dark ceiling was brought to life with a swirling galaxy and sweeps of sparkling diamonds. Fafnir howled as twinkling stars rained onto them.

But as the first stars burst apart in explosions of color, something in the air shifted.

Tokoyami stiffened as Dark Shadow screeched within his mind, and in the corner of his eye, he saw some of his classmates clutch their heads. Others were too busy watching the show and swept the light headache aside as if it were nothing.

“Fumi!! It’s here again!! THE RED RAIN!”

Tokoyami shot to his feet in a panic, but was stopped with a firm hand on his shoulder.

He looked in surprise at Bakugo, his expression grave, “Sit down, Bird Brain.”

“But-!”

Bakugo’s eyes flashed, “Sit. Down.”

Tokoyami slowly sank back in his seat, rigid as he harshly whispered, “What are you doing!? Surely you felt it too!”

Most of his classmates’ eyes were turned up to the ocean of colors over them, but a few watched him with similar looks of worry and... acceptance . Todoroki, Midoriya, Iida, Kirishima, Yaoyorozu. It was only now that he noticed their placement around him, as if intentional.

“You...” Tokoyami shivered, Bakugo still had not let go. “You knew this was going to happen?”

“We knew you’d probably sense it the most.” Midoriya gave him a shaky smile, “But there’s nothing to worry about.”

“How can you not be worried? ”

“Look at Joker.” Iida said.

Joker had detached from Kohryu and fell towards the tallest platform, performing agile flips before he landed in a certain pose, both of his feet wide apart, one hand on the ground and his head bowed. His footsteps splashed in great waves of purples and reds.

Joker looked up, directly at them . His grin was gone, his eyes blazing with twin suns that bore into his soul. Dark Shadow shivered at it.

The cheers were accompanied by stomping feet, the noise so loud they couldn't even hear their own thoughts. Kohryu's roar added another layer of noise to shove away the strange shift in atmosphere most had ignored. Joker and the others on the platforms did a bow before the stage went dark, but Kohryu was still as bright as a disco ball.

"Joker knows." Todoroki leaned in to whisper, "Let him handle it."

Tokoyami swallowed, "Very well."

Bakugo curtly nodded and let his hand drop.

As they say, the show must go on.

La Brava blinked as a raindrop hit her nose.

Gentle Criminal gasped, "My dear-"

"I know."

The pair watched U.A. bleed into a hell-scape, the bloody rain falling around the invisible barrier that both cradled them in the air and kept the entire tent untouched. With a snap of his fingers, Gentle Criminal put an additional barrier over them to keep them dry.

La Brava balled her hands into fists as she watched the bloody tears trickle down the barriers, "Go get 'em, Joker."

"I'll keep the show rolling. Get the the USJ, Trickster!" Kohryu howled as Joker hurled himself from the stage and into the hallway, where Mona and Lavenza waited beside an open Velvet Room door.

They wordlessly jumped in together.

Joker turned right on his heel as Lavenza brushed the gate with her fingers, and when they jumped out-

The USJ was in complete pandemonium.

A red hue had taken over the glass dome, bathing everything in a hopeless light of bloody terror. Spires of bone protruded from the ground, with skeletal spines crawling over everything like demonic centipedes.

The tear in reality was visible . It loomed over everything like a great shattered mirror, pouring unrestrained Distortion into the facility. Sounds of battle hounded their ears, flashes of elemental magic and the screech of metal sang with shouts.

“Joker, look!” Mona cried in horror.

They turned to see a tall silver angel standing over Yagi, Cementoss, and Ectoplasm.

“Th-that’s...” Mona’s pupils shrunk, “That’s a Shadow!!”

All color left Joker’s face as they witnessed their very first Shadow in over half a year. But this... this wasn’t the basic angel made of crude shapes from the Qlipoth World. No, this angel had a fully formed humanoid body, with four great wings sweeping over its torso. The etchings of a hundred eyes were carved within its metal body.

It turned to them, its face a polished, empty mask.

“Help the others!” Joker order, “I have this one!”

“Got it, Joker!” Mona replied.

The Shadow seemed shocked as it flinched away, but with a cry of rage Joker leapt, twirling through the air to land on its shoulder.

“I’ll reveal your true form!” He grabbed that mask and ripped it away.

He jumped off as black blood spurted from the torn face and covered its whole body, which contorted on itself before it fell into a black, bubbling pool.

Joker landed by Yagi, “Are you guys okay?”

“Y-Yes!” Yagi was pale, but his blue eyes blazed as he gripped Providence tighter.

“We are unharmed for the moment.” Cementoss said with an impressive amount of calm clarity.

“How are you here already?” Ectoplasm asked, eyes wide.

“No time to explain! These are-”

Joker didn’t finish his sentence before the black pool burst, and a group of five unfamiliar Shadows hovered above them: Four of which were translucent angel statues made of glass, with vibrant red hearts beating in their torsos. At the head of the group was an angel in flowing white robes and long hair, its face covered by a golden mask and a halo over its head.

“Virtues!?” Gabriel cried in the mindscape, “And... Angels, but not the ones we know from home. These are far more powerful!”

“The Trickster is alive!?” One of the Virtues screamed.

Another growled, “How!? Our Lord sensed that he was-”

“It doesn’t matter!” The Angel snarled, “Kill him! Kill the abomination for our Lord!”

“Wait!” Joker cried, “Can’t we talk about this? You don’t have to-”

“SLAUGHTER HIM BEFORE HIS WORDS TWIST OUR MINDS!!”
The Angel screeched in a tone of grinding metal.

Magic charged the air and Joker jumped to avoid their blessed attacks, pillars of light erupting around him as exorcism slips dogged him. The heroes followed his lead, scattering to surround the angels.

Yagi provided cover with his gun, bullets flying through the air. Ectoplasm and Cementoss used a Blizzard Ring and a Dragon's heart to counter with their own magic to give Joker an opening.

"Alice!"

Alice burst out of the mindscape with feral bloodlust, "Just die!"

For once since being thrown in this world, Joker didn't fear the high pitched screaming of her teddy bears as they dog piled on the angels and exploded. The Virtues were eradicated with painful screams and splatters of black blood, the various light pillars died away as the exorcism slips fell limp to the floor.

"How dare you!" The Angel cried as it collapsed to the floor from the fallout, "I'll make you pay for that, sinner!"

"Talk. Now ." Joker said as he pointed his gun at its head, "And maybe I'll spare you."

"NEVER!" The Angel covered its ears and howled, "I'll never betray my Lord! Never never neverneverneverNEVERNEVER NEVER -"

Joker pulled the trigger. The lone gunshot was accompanied by the gasps of the heroes and the splatter of Shadow blood, the Angel disappearing with a mad cry and an explosion of black.

"Joker..." Yagi exhaled in a shaky breath.

"How could he..." Cementoss whispered.

He looked back to the heroes staring at him with wide, horrified eyes at what looked like a merciless execution of a disarmed foe. Joker opened his mouth to explain, but more silvery angels appeared around them in bursts of shadow.

Alice jumped between Joker, the heroes, and the new Shadows, "We have this area covered, Big Brother! Go!"

Ectoplasm and Cementoss fell into equal stances, expressions wiped of shock to focus on the battle.

Joker bolted, Yagi watched him go before he returned to the battle at hand.

Mona and Lavenza had joined another battle alongside Midnight and Snipe, with another group of Shadows he had no knowledge of. A knight donned in crusader's armor, dual wielding a combat shotgun and an assault rifle. It flew from the bright circles of magic floating at its back. The other was a mechanical abomination of human and different animal faces, red feathered wings stuck out of the small openings on the top of the strange contraption.

"Terminators and Cherubs." Gabriel's laugh wasn't a happy one, "I've not seen them in many years. The Magician and Strength have those covered, but the Priestess fights alone!"

Joker looked to the arch over the stairs. There was another of the angelic Shadows twice as big as the others, but this one was gold and had six wings and four arms holding various weapons. Miruko ducked and weaved over the spear and sword strikes, laughing as she countered the next mace swing with an axe kick that generated its own wind. Sparks flew as the larger Shadow was thrown off balance, unable to guard itself with the shield in its last hand.

"I'll rip your face off, jackass!!"

Miruko jumped on its shoulder, jamming the silver blades of her Gordios into the faceless mask to tear it off with a deluge of black sludge. She leapt and landed beside Joker with a grin.

Joker fell into a battle stance with her as the black pool exploded.

Another pair of angels hovered before the stairs. The one to the left had darker blue skin and pale hair, with six crimson wings. The other had a lighter tint of blue skin, with vivid green hair and gold wings, in his hand was a long rapier. Their wings curled around them completely, as both of them were missing the lower halves of their bodies.

Gabriel appeared between the groups, the odd pair's expression hardening, "Aniel... Kazfiel... it's been quite some time, hasn't it?"

"Don't you dare speak as if we're on familiar terms!" Aniel, the crimson winged angel, spat.

"You've turned your back on god to help this blasphemer who came back from the dead?" Kazfiel shook his head in disgust.

"How do you know of the Trickster's death?" Gabriel asked with a razor's edge to her voice.

Kazfiel laughed hollowly, "It matters not. Whatever the case, he's an unholy abomination that must be purged for our Lord! Oh, it sickens me to see how far you've fallen, Gabriel."

"As if you're one to speak of being 'fallen', Kazfiel!"

A bright blue burst of flame brought forth Michael next to Gabriel. Joker looked to see Lavenza approaching, Compendium open to his page. Mona, Mercurius, Midnight, and Snipe continued their battle with the Cherubs and Terminators behind her.

"Who was it that tried to learn to true name of God from me with silver-tongued deceit?" Michael's wings flared in rage, "And now you serve the false god that has brought nothing but pain and suffering upon humanity!"

"You lie!" Aniel said, wings bristling, "Humanity wants to be ruled over, not just in our world, but so many other worlds like this one, too! Can't you see we can bring peace and unity across all of space and time?"

Miruko gawked at Joker in disbelief.

"Peace? Unity?" Gabriel swung her sword in an arc, the blade singing through the air, "Does this invasion look like peace to you!? No! It is subjugation! Please, wake up and cast away your loyalty to the false god! Join the Trickster's side and stop this!"

"No!" Aniel cried. "Our Lord is true and just! His word is law!"

"The demon's wickedness will not tempt us!" Kazfiel said as he glared at Joker, "We'll slay him if it's the last thing we do!"

"Trickster," Lavenza whispered at Joker's side, "I sense incredible power under the rift. It may be their commander."

Miruko wiped off her disbelief with a sharp smirk, "We can handle these losers. Joker, the strongest one's all yours! Give him a good ass kicking from me, yeah?"

"Be careful." Joker put his hand over his black and gold mask, "Satanael!"

Aniel and Kazfiel gasped as Satanael rose behind Joker. Even in his smaller size, he was intimidating with arms and pitch black wings majestically splayed. They cowered when Satanael returned their glare with one of his own. Gabriel and Michael smirked when the other two angels began to sweat.

"N-no you don't!" Kazfiel shot forward.

Gabriel met him in a clash of swords, smiling softly as sparks peppered them, "You'll not touch them, traitor."

Micheal jabbed his spear at Aniel, the four beautiful angels entering an elegant dance of combat. Miruko cackled as she joined in, using the Dragon's Horn on her belt to throw severe atomic magic between strikes.

Joker wasted not another moment.

He and Satanael locked wrists and shot into the air with a hard flap from Satanael's wings. The central plaza was a war zone of heroes and angelic Shadows fighting tooth and nail to gain ground. Hawks dove on one particular group giving Best Jeanist and Gang Orca trouble, flames wreathing him as he barreled through Shadows like a raging phoenix.

Ryukyu did the same with another group, and with Nighteye's frightening accuracy they managed to thin the ranks around Mr. Compress and Spinner with bombs of ice and curse damage. They got the pleasure of seeing Tensei, whole body crackling in lightning from Ishtar's Goddess Horn, kicking a Virtue apart at literal lightning speeds.

Eraserhead, Present Mic, and Tsukauchi formed another squad at the base of the stairs. The detective was a crack-shot, the bullets from Judge Of The Dead striking through the Shadows' heads as the others distracted them.

"There, Joker." Satanael pointed with his other arm, "The Attendants..."

Elizabeth, Theodore, and Margaret were fighting against more waves of the larger golden angels with their Personas. They kept the number of stronger Shadows like Aniel and Kazfiel down while they waited for Joker to move against the biggest fish in the facility.

Behind them, as Lavenza said, must've been their commander.

It calmly floated below the rift on eight wings, with various different limbs holding things like a book, a staff, or a gun, other empty palms were open with the carvings of eyes staring across the battlefield. The shining platinum metal on its body had a brighter lustre with hues of shifting colors underneath. It didn't have Yaldabaoth's size or winged halo, but the uncanny resemblance was there despite the additional changes. It watched indifferently as its kin were locked in battle. With a bored brush of its free hand, dozens more silver and gold Shadows appeared and joined in the fights around the USJ.

"Let's give Yaldabaoth Jr. a warm welcome." Joker looked up at his true other self with a shameless grin, "You thinking what I'm thinking?"

"We art thou, thou art us." Satanael chuckled, "I wouldn't have it any other way, my dear Trickster."

"Let's do this!"

Joker's world became a blur of colors and the sounds of chaotic battle when Satanael violently twisted around. His true other self gained speed with a few more twirls before Satanael tossed him. Joker soared over the USJ, the wind howling in his ears.

Yaldabaoth Jr. craned its head up as Joker's shadow fell over it. Joker collided with its face, the mask so large that Joker had to grab it with both hands.

He smirked as it tried to shake him off, "You're mine!"

The mask was ripped off. Joker dropped to the ground as black blood coated the ground and clogged the fountain, roiling and rippling until it emerged from the bubbling pool of shadow. Joker's heart leapt to his throat as this angel rose to nearly five times his height.

Golden robes fluttered around a full metallic body, shining coldly from the rays of light generated around him. The feathers of his wings were like blades overlapping one another, scraping together in a razor sharp rasping. The white crosses in his emerald eyes blazed with haughty arrogance.

Joker stood before the greatest angel, who had given him his strongest gun before he fought Yaldabaoth, the Voice of God himself- Metatron.

“You .” Metatron’s voice reverberated in timbres of cold steel and iron, “How do you yet breathe?”

“This again?” Joker unsheathed Paradise Lost, a weapon fit to cleave angels. Metatron sneered at it. “What are you talking about?”

“Our Lord felt your presence, that blasphemous bond you had with him, die. And yet you’re standing before me.” Metatron stared into Joker’s eyes, “This makes no sense.”

“Yaldabaoth sent you here because he thinks I’m dead ?”

“Hmph. He summoned us to his glorious side as you exhaled your last foul breath, evolved us into greater powers as your rotten soul withered away. We received our mission then, our arrival is a prelude to his holy rule over this world!”

Joker shook his head, “How long did it take you to get here?”

“Mere minutes.” Metatron frowned, “I thought we were lost for a moment in that blasted void, but our Lord’s light reappeared and guided us here, the first world to fall.”

Joker frowned in thought.

Kamino was months ago, but to them the news of his death seemed fresh.

He had died, but his bond with Yaldabaoth must’ve died with him since he’d taken the mantle of the World. Joker’s eyes trailed up to the cracks of broken reality as he tried to put the pieces together, watching the infinite black void twist and turn in impossible ways.

Yaldabaoth tore apart entire realities and warped the laws that kept everything in tact. But what about the space in between worlds?

Either Yaldabaoth had unintentionally Distorted the flows of time as well, or he gravely miscalculated forces he had no understanding of.

“But your Second Awakening changed that.” Lavenza said after they reunited, “It blazed a pathway through the darkness, and with the aid of my siblings, we were able to break through and reunite with you. Although, the trip seems to have been one way.”

Igor and the Attendants were drawn here through his Second Awakening and the call of his World Arcana, but it was a one way trip in which they arrived within seconds. Yaldabaoth was arrogant enough to believe that with Joker’s death, keeping watch on the Velvet Room was pointless.

But that begged the question of the Red Rain itself, being an extension of Yaldabaoth’s power.

The only instances were when his phone had been on before he met Overhaul, which broke under the strain, and now, after Margaret activated it under his order. Satanael had sensed weird lights within the break in reality, and these Shadows were drawn by some sort of light when they got lost. Could the light that brought them here be an anomaly messing things up, or some part the Metaverse itself? Or in the Velvet Room’s case, had his new and growing powers pulled them here instantaneously, or did it have something to do with Mona since he was nearby at that time? Some strange combination of both?

Either way, with no guide to show them the way, not only were Yaldabaoth and his forces completely helpless in the space between worlds, but the changes in the flow of time itself greatly favored Joker.

They were still on a time limit as Yaldabaoth’s caustic power ate through the space between and the last natural defences of these worlds, but the balance tipped towards their side for once.

Metatron reeled back when Joker burst out into fits of laughter, "What insanity is this, sinner?"

"It is not insanity." Satanael floated down behind his Trickster, a smug smile on his lips.

"Satanael." The two angels glared at one another as Joker calmed down, "If it is not insanity, then what other strain of madness is it?"

Satanael smirked, "He's laughing because Yaldabaoth is a bigger fool than we previously believed."

"Don't you dare speak my Lord's name in vain!"

"Oh, I'll do as I please." Satanael said.

"Do you really think," Joker wiped his eyes and grinned up at Metatron, "That Yaldabaoth can win? He was wrong about me being dead when he sent you on this suicide mission, and he's wrong about trying to take over these other worlds because he's a greedy, power hungry megalomaniac! You've already lost."

"I am the Voice of God!" Metatron howled in fury, "His divine will shall be done by my hand! I'll not rest until all opposing sinners are crushed! If you must fall under my might instead of accepting our Lord's merciful rule, then so be it!"

"Really?" Joker unsheathed the Nataraja and pointed it at Metatron, "Your previous self helped me out before. He saw Yaldabaoth for what he truly was! Why can't you?"

Metatron grasped his head, "I'll not be swayed by your trickery! My previous selves were failures brainwashed by a devil's wicked tongue!" Joker opened his mouth to retort, but the green of Metatron's eyes flashed red, "Enough! Face my judgement and perish, worm!"

Metatron summoned a small army of Shadows to overwhelm the USJ. More spires of bone shot from the ground and the air weighed heavier on their lungs as the Distortions spread under his power. Metatron lifted his arm, his metallic limbs screeching as Almighty magic prickled their skin.

“Satanael!” Joker yelled, sprinting around the fountain.

Satanael flew back and rained down thunderous bullets as the unrelenting light of a Megidolaon shook the USJ, leaving a gaping crater in the central plaza.

“Joker!” Margaret flew to his side with Yoshitsune as the dust settled, floating like a goddess of war. “What are your orders?”

Joker shook his head as Metatron blocked Satanael’s blade with the metal of his arm, sparks flying in all directions. “Talking won’t work, so we’ll have to weaken him first. We’ll enact plan b!”

“Understood.”

She and Yoshitsune disappeared into the uncontrolled chaos, the iconic slashing of a Hassou Tobi splashing black blood and sending screaming angels to their deaths. Elizabeth and Lucifer danced with the light of Theodore and Helel, dozens of Shadows falling in their terrible wake only for more to replace them. It was like cutting off the head of a hydra, only for two more to appear. The horrible gleam of shining Shadows cut off his view of the heroes.

Joker tore his gaze away and shot Metatron with the Nataraja, the bullets bouncing off of his chest.

“You’ll have to do better than that!” Metatron beat Satanael back with a hit from his massive bladed wings, the feathers ground together like the drawing of a sword as he rose into the air, his ruby eyes glowing with the heat of a volcano.

Lasers shot from Metatron's eyes and struck the ground around Joker, the concrete boiling under his feet.

"Master!" Cerberus materialized behind Joker, who jumped on as Cerberus broke out in a sprint to avoid pillars of roaring fire sprouting around them.

Metatron locked onto them with his eyes, the attack following. One split second was all it took for Metatron to gaze across the various zones behind them. The Squall Zone's dome melted, the Flood Zone's lake boiled away into nothing with great clouds of steam. The yacht crashed onto the floor and broke apart, the pieces slowly melting into slag. A light grazing seared the Conflagration Zone as the dome collapsed in on itself and destroyed the small city within. The trees and greenery around the plaza were turned to ash and the mountains in the Mountain Zone were sliced cleanly in half.

Pain seared into them as the attack caught up, leaving a boiling scar all across the USJ. Satanael cried in rage as he lunged at Metatron again, cutting off the attack in a frantic flurry of beating wings.

Cerberus' skin smoked as he took the brunt of the damage, but remained standing when he slowed down and allowed Joker to hop off. The only small grace was that Metatron's devastating ability didn't touch anywhere near the other battles, most of the Zones were simply caught in the crossfire.

"What happened?" Joker asked as the damage soaked into their soul.

"It wasn't fire," Cerberus growled, "It was Almighty!"

Metatron broke off from Satanael's attack and hovered over the fountain. "Wait... Two ?"

They looked up at Metatron, the crimson of his eyes fading to green in shock as he looked between Satanael and Cerberus.

“Oh, do I have a surprise for you.” Joker, his face dusted with ash, laughed as he pulled Fafnir, Mother Harlot, Cybele, Hastur, and Odin into reality.

His soul strained at the sheer number of Personas anchored in reality, like a vase overflowing with an ocean’s worth of water, struggling to keep it all in without shattering. But the cracks of his soul had been painted over in gold, tempered with a new iron will forged in crimson blood and azure flame that would not crumble before the enemy.

Not now.

Not ever again .

Metatron snapped out of his horrified shock with a wave his hand, Shadows rising up in glimmers of gold and silver around him.

The Personas jumped at the Shadows, tearing off the masks with teeth, claws, or weapons. An explosion of black pooled around the battered plaza as scores of angelic beings charged at the order of their commander.

Joker waltzed through the horde as his Personas made a path towards Metatron and Satanael. The entire mindscape flowed into a united soul as the merciless onslaught continued-

-Fafnir cackled as he tore the heads of Terminators off with his jaws, their bullets useless on his silver scales splattered with black-

-The sorrow from Gabriel as she plunged her blade through Kazfiel’s neck, Aniel wailing in rage-

-Cybele dancing through winds tearing out the vibrant feathers of the Cherubs, the many abyssal eyes summoned by Hastur piercing their bodies-

-Alice's cruel laughter as scores of Angels fell beneath her dark power-

-Mother Harlot's joy as she froze another wave of Virtues solid, Odin cleaving them with his spear-

-Kohryu twirled over a small Sea of cheering humans, their boundless energy flooding into the Trickster's soul-

-Joker and Satanael moved as one as they continued assaulting Metatron with blade and bullets-

But one Persona languished, unable to stop picturing the smile of his previous Wildcard amidst the chaos. His heart once again brimmed with new power, but unlike the dark insanity from Kamino, this one was lighter... brimming with Hope to end this slaughter.

Joker and Metatron's colliding Megidolaon attacks caused an earthquake that split the destroyed fragments of the USJ in half, crevasses sprouting to every corner like the deep roots of a gnarled old tree. The glass dome cracked and rained down shards of glass, small trickles and rivers of blood red flowing in the facility. The first splatters reached Joker's feet when Orpheus Picaro snapped.

"I'll stop this madness!"

Joker and Satanael froze as the energy from the small Sea within U.A. was absorbed by Orpheus Picaro.

Metatron laughed coldly as he threw a Megidolaon at them in their distraction. Pain writhed through Joker and Satanael, but they were still standing, albeit injured and shaking. The boundless flow of magic from the Sea stopped dead like a frozen river.

"What's the matter?" Metatron taunted, bearing damage to his silver skin, his robe torn, but he held strong in his own right, "Have you decided to surrender? Bow your heads to me and I'll offer a swift death!"

“NO!”

Orpheus Picaro appeared in a fiery swirl, his shout resonating through the USJ. The battles stopped, humans and hundreds of Shadows staring in shock when Orpheus Picaro's body glowed with vibrant prismatic energy.

“Orpheus,” Satanael frowned, “What is the meaning of this?”

Orpheus Picaro tucked his lyre under his arm, his other hand resting over his heart, “I've felt a power steadily beating within me as the Trickster continues his journey in this world. Now, with this battle of fate and the energy garnered by the Sea of Human Souls, I can don my next form and end this senseless battle!”

Joker inhaled sharply, “You mean...?”

Satanael's eyes widened, “Yes! Orpheus, take that power and soar into new heights!”

Metatron growled, “I won't let you-”

“SILENCE!” Satanael's magic bubbled under Metatron and an oily black serpent shot out.

Metatron snarled as Black Viper wrapped around him, fangs sinking into the crook of his neck. The other angels moved towards the plaza with a unified cry to free their commander, the sheer number of them cloaking the central plaza in shadow. Then, a light encompassed the whole of the USJ. Not the burning white of a Megidolaon, but the calm and pure essence of a light not found anywhere on earth.

It faded after a moment, and Joker gasped at the Persona that took Orpheus Picaro's place.

Still painted in colors of deep black and red, stood a being similar in looks to Orpheus, though not. He had longer white hair and a spiked crown, and instead of a lyre, his left arm was wrapped in chains attached to a string of small coffins. He ascended high over the USJ, the spiked obelisk floating at the Persona's back followed, the golden wings attached to it spread wide.

A horrible screeching battered their ears as hundreds of Angels, Virtues, Cherubs, Terminators, and several forms of Aniel and Kazfiel converged on Messiah Picaro. Joker clamped his hands over his ears at the unnatural, grating sounds ripped from the realms of the divine, the dizzying orchestra not meant to be heard by human ears.

"We art thou, thou art us." The Persona's tranquil voice cut through the mad cacophony of noise, "My name is Messiah Picaro, and I order you all to begone. "

He cast a Megidolaon fueled by the remaining energy from the Sea of Human Souls, the smile of his previous Wildcard fading from memory as he forged a new vow for his next Wildcard. Joker heard every Shadow scream as their lives were extinguished in one fell swoop.

All except for one.

Thick silence wallowed after the magic dissipated and Messiah Picaro descended, the light previously around his body all but used up. They felt the eyes of all the heroes on them as Messiah Picaro's feet touched down in front of Metatron, the sole survivor who was now on his knees with his heavy wings drooping.

Metatron stared in disbelief, "It... it cannot be..."

"You have a choice to make, Metatron." Messiah Picaro said serenely, "Be the Trickster's prisoner, or become his mask and help us fight against the false god's tyranny. Which will it be?"

"I'll never be that devil's mask!" Metatron snarled.

Joker sheathed his weapons and looked at Margaret, who nodded and dispelled Yoshitsune. Margaret walked towards Metatron, handing Joker his old phone in the process.

A Velvet Room door appeared and opened, writhing black chains poured out of it with a snap of Margaret's fingers. The Black Viper disappeared as the chains coiled around Metatron's body and dragged him towards the Velvet room, but the angel wasn't done just yet.

He focused all of his twisted hatred at Joker, "You may have won this battle, you incorrigible demon, but the war will be won by my Lord! Mark my words, God will descend upon this world and wash it clean of sinners! He will not spare any of you as your souls burn in the fires of-"

Elizabeth jumped and kicked Metatron in the face, flinging him into the Velvet Room door which then closed in a loud slam of metal.

"Geez. What a chatterbox." Elizabeth muttered.

"He'll be locked away until we can interrogate him." Margaret said with a sigh.

Joker grimly nodded and looked at his phone. The fruits of their mission bore an unexpected result: a startling change to the Metanav. The icon had the same cracks as the rift over their heads, each shattered piece of the Metanav's icon bearing a different art style in glitched or reversed colors. He frowned as he exited the app in the way he would when they left the Metaverse.

"Returning to the real world..." A warped voice said with a hiss and pops of static.

Slowly, the cracks in reality sealed themselves back together, and the reddish hue of the sky faded to a peaceful blue. Any blood red puddles turned to normal water. Bone spires and skeletons receded back into the broken earth. The only evidence that the tear remained was a single break in the air over the fountain, like a bullet through glass. The broken USJ dome allowed sunlight to pass through, dotting the razed facility in a new warmth.

Someone cleared their throat before Joker could check through the Metanav for more clues.

He looked up. All the heroes' gazes were locked onto him in silence. Scuffed, bruised, and bloodied with obvious expressions of shock, disbelief, confusion, horror, or a combination of all of them. Ryukyu had landed softly while he was distracted, so it was Nezu who cleared his throat, fur raised on end.

"Your performance?" Nezu asked as easy as if they were talking of the weather, though his black eyes glinted eerily.

Sweat broke out on the back of his neck, but Joker replied calmly, "I need to do the finale."

"Right." Nezu turned towards the heroes, "We'll wait for you in the designated meeting room."

"I'll heal you all first."

Cybele's Salvation might've healed their injuries, but traces of the nightmare they just survived were stuck to them in their expressions and torn costumes. Only Mr. Compress, Spinner, and Lady Stubbbs were calm, the men giving him thumbs up to signify that they were okay.

Joker glanced at Messiah Picaro as all other Personas aside from Kohryu returned to him. The new Persona bowed deeply before following his brethren. Joker turned his back when he couldn't take the heroes' blatant stares and walked into the Velvet Room.

The Attendants and Mona joined him seconds later.

Heavy drag marks and gouges on the stairs led to one of the isolated cells in the outer ring. He chose to ignore it and turned to face the wall of light, flinching at the unexpected pair of arms wrapping around him, joined by another.

“Elizabeth? Theodore?” Joker blinked, awkwardly hugging them back

The both of them let go, and Joker gaped as Elizabeth hastily wiped tears from her eyes.

“We never thought we’d see Messiah be reborn like that.” Elizabeth said, smiling as she ruffled Joker’s hair. “Well done.”

“He looks dashing in your colors, Joker.” Theodore cleared his throat, “Though I never thought to see Elizabeth cry...”

“Hey!”

“Ooomf!” Theodore clutched his stomach where Elizabeth punched him.

Margaret chuckled softly, “Enough fooling around. We still have work to do.”

The white door rippled and they stepped into the hallway of his stadium. Kohryu’s roars and the cheers of the small Sea within the tent soothed them.

Mona looked at him in concern, “After everything that just happened, you’re still good to go on stage?”

“I’m as good as new, Mona. Satanael used his Victory Cry.”

“Th-that’s not what I meant.” Mona sighed when Joker gave him a look, “Well, if you’re sure...”

Joker got out his other phone and texted Gentle Criminal and La Brava the all clear, and to do their part of the finale at Mona’s signal, “You ready, Lavenza?”

Lavenza smiled, something so warm and soft and filled with pride, as she ran her gloved finger down the many bookmarks in the Compendium. "Of course, Trickster. Let's give them the finale they all deserve!"

Joker nodded as he headed towards the main stage, "It's time to finish this."

"Ren-nii hasn't appeared in a while," Eri watched as Kohryu vanished after a display of warping colors and strange eyes.

Kaito had his arms crossed, finger tapping incessantly on his arm, "I'm sure he's fine."

Mirio glanced at him in concern, "What do you mean? Its not like he's in any danger!" When Kaito said nothing, Risumi and Ayumu exchanged worried glances while Hitoshi narrowed his eyes. Mirio's smile faltered, "Er... right?"

Just then, another pyre ignited on the stage. Then another, and another. One after the next until the entire stage was nearly full, and at their heart stood Joker. People began to cheer as Byakko, Black Frost, and Mother harlot erected a massive ice pillar halfway up to the ceiling.

Joker moved like a maestro as he guided the next Personas' in tandem to his elegant movements.

Odin and Cu Chulainn struck the pillar with their spears, cutting off large chunks and sending an icy spray into the air.

Cerberus and Byakko roared as they charged, claws slicing through a portion like butter.

Gabriel and Fafnir were next, shaving off more snow to pepper the air. The first chills of the final act reached the audience.

Yatagarasu, Cybele, and Alice carved it with their magic, and the ice sculpture began to take shape.

A few of Joker's Personas vanished, replaced by more as Joker continued to direct them in a mesmerizing waltz.

Hastur, Vasuki, and even Kohryu returned, their honed strikes hacked more from the statue into a more refined shape. The wind generated by Kohryu carried fine ice shards over the audience.

Shiva, Nebiros, Vishnu, Titania, Micheal, Uriel, Byakhee, Macabre, Mot.

One after another were secretly summoned by Lavenza to continue refining the ice sculpture until it became recognizable, disappearing as fast as another took its place in a seamless flow of deities.

Moloch, Thor, Kali, Dionysus, Raphael, Beliel, Norn, Pixie, Bishamonten.

The ice crystals turned into a fine, cool mist washing through the whole stadium.

Satanael and Messiah Picaro appeared over the statue and, with a mutual nod, plummeted at the same time. Their stokes were the final touches to the statue, but Joker wasn't finished.

He twirled on his heels to face the audience, and made a downwards swiping motion with his arm that ended with him kneeling, the Personas following all in unison. Suddenly, the perpetual darkness plaguing the tent was driven away by the rays of sunlight shining down from the open ceiling, the tarp having been ripped away so suddenly.

The air sparkled like diamonds as the sun bounced around the mist, casting the whole stadium in a veil of shifting colors. Best of all, the sunlight pierced through the translucent sculpture and made it glow .

The giant statue was gorgeous. A work of art. A marvel.

It began with Joker and Arsene posing on the bottom in uncanny detail, as if carved from the hands of a renaissance sculptor. And from them spawned every Persona in the Compendium, rising up and out in perfect copies of the real ones, all held together with swirls of frozen blue flame.

But at the peak, held up by Satanael's great icy wings, were Seth and Sraosha locked in flight towards the heavens.

There was awed silence, then a deafening wall of noise as people rose from their chairs in a standing ovation.

Hitoshi found himself joining in, grinning as Joker and his multitude of Personas took a bow in the sunlit aura of rainbows. Hitoshi squinted. The last he knew, Joker had trouble holding 8 Personas out at once, but there were more than that on stage now. They began to disappear before he could count the new total until only Joker and Kohryu remained.

"What's he doing?" Mirio asked, awe-struck.

"What else?" Kaito smirked as Kohryu lowered his head to the stage, "It's the Phantom Thief way to leave in style ."

Joker hopped on Kohryu's head and they circled over the audience. He waved to people with his iconic grin before the dragon shot out of the opening at the top, the tip of his tail tossing the last of the sparkling ice crystals into the clear blue sky.

Joker, Mona, La Brava, Gentle Criminal, and all of the Attendants hurried down a certain hallway within U.A.'s main school building. The Festival had concluded. People vacated the grounds as the students' spirits soared at the raging success of the Festival overall. The sun began to set by the time they reached the door to the meeting room, the voices behind it were muffled, but frantic.

“Joker...” Mona looked at him, ears wilting. “Are you ready?”

Joker’s hands curled into fists, “Yup.”

“We’re with you.” La Brava grabbed his sleeve.

“Indeed.” Gentle Criminal stood tall as his piercing gaze drilled into the door, “We won’t make the same mistake when you first shared your story with us, Joker. We’re in this together.”

Lavenza gave him a nod of encouragement, as did the other Attendants.

Joker took a deep breath and threw the door open.

Conversation stopped at their sudden appearance, most heroes landing bug-eyed or panicked gazes right on Joker. They stared at him differently now, as if he were a brand new foreign species never before seen on this planet, all of them having heard the angels’ or Metatron’s direct words about the truth of their predicament. Or, like Yagi, Cementoss, and Ectoplasm, witnessed first hand what happened to Shadows who didn’t comply.

Mr. Compress and Spinner were the only ones to give reassuring waves. Lady Stubbs kept glaring at Nighteye for some reason, the man frowning sharply.

The silence stretched and crept over every facet of the room like a persistent weed. Nobody moved or breathed. Joker set his jaw and repressed shivers at feeling like he was being held under a microscope. Which, in this case, he was.

Naturally, Joker did the first thing that sprang to mind.

He cleared his throat and imitated Sojiro, “Let me explain.”

Internal screaming intensifies

I've literally been teasing my betas with Metatron gifs, using his iconic Fire of Sinai, for about a year now with 0 context, and I've been so excited to throw a twist in and use really old angel designs from SMT(plus the Angels from SMT V), some of which we've not seen in literal decades, adding to Messiah Picaro's evolution which I've been so excited for for several months. Ah, the true beginning of the end everybody. It's going to be fun >:)

Another fun fact for the beginning of this chapter, I actually did that reading for myself and Arachne to add into the story, and it worked out so well in ending with The World.

Welp, with this cliffhanger I'm going to start my break. See you guys on July 8th!

Another Ideology

Chapter 92: Another Ideology

“Okay, you’re scaring me.” Hawks said more seriously, “What’s wrong?”

Miruko muttered something.

“What?” Ryukyu asked.

“It’s not fair!!” Miruko yelled as she round-house kicked the street light in half, the bulb flashing out as it crashed onto the pavement.

Woah an update a bit over 3 weeks earlier than planned!? There's a good reason for this, and also a good reason as to why the next chapter will have to be delayed to August as well.

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

Joker’s story spilled out in a never ending flow of words, all documented by Tsukauchi’s pen.

Protecting that woman from Shido and getting arrested, his probation to Tokyo. Meeting Sojiro and staying in Leblanc’s attic. How he and Skull discovered the Metaverse, meeting Mona, their first target and the result of taking his Treasure. Other Phantom Thieves and Palaces, explaining the true nature of Personas and Shadows and battles against Palace Rulers.

Questions were frequently asked and answered. The room became choked in tension after Sae helped him escape the interrogation room, drugged up to the gills after dodging an assassin’s bullet, the heroes' wrath tempered with tense shoulders and watery red eyes. More than a few had darker expressions or white knuckles.

Joker proceeded with Shido's Palace, Crow's death, and up the Qlipoth World with Yaldabaoth. The silence began then. He saw it as soon as Yaldabaoth split reality and cast the Phantom Thieves to different worlds, and while they regaled their ventures in this world starting from the League's first attack.

The confused glimmers in their eyes, the bewildered stares between one another, as if all of the stunts in Tokyo happening in a different version of Japan was too outlandish to believe. Nezu's inky gaze drifted back and forth from the dead silence of one half of the table, to the other side who hadn't stopped speaking.

Tsukauchi's faithful pen kept writing until they rounded off with their latest battle against Metatron, having scrawled enough pages to compile several novels worth of events. Tsukauchi set his pen down, threaded his hands together, and stared at the notes with haunted eyes.

Nobody spoke a word since.

The vigilantes traded glances, but Joker signaled them to wait. The Attendants stayed silent most of the time, only speaking when spoken too, but even Margaret and Theodore were showing subtle signs of impatience. Several more minutes pass, and the first sparks of irritation arose in Joker's heart.

Joker grabbed the cup in front of him, frowning when the coffee had long dried up. With a sigh, he placed it on the table harder than he intended, the loud thunk of ceramic made the heroes flinch.

"Will somebody say something ?"

Nezu gave a pointed glance to Midnight, who cleared her throat and snapped the heroes' silence like a twig.

“I believe them.” Midnight said resolutely, “I said I’d have their back no matter what, and I keep my promises. After what happened at the USJ, the destruction far worse than anything the League did... It’d be signing our own death warrants if we covered our ears and turned our backs on them simply because we think their story is too far fetched.”

“Well said, Midnight!” Nezu chirped.

“Of course we should believe him.” Yagi offered a warm smile to Joker, who smiled back. “The least we could offer is our trust and compassion.”

Nezu looked to Tsukauchi, “What are your thoughts, detective?”

Tsukauchi shook his head, “It’s a lot to take in at once.”

“But they haven’t lied once, have they.” It was more of a statement than a question.

“No.” Tsukauchi shuffled his notes, “My Quirk registered everything as the truth, and given the current state of the USJ, it’s anything but a fantastical lie.”

“Of course its not a ‘fantastical lie!’” Spinner cried.

“Merp!” Lady Stubbs added with a stamp of her paw.

“But having multiple worlds in trouble at the hands of a false god is a hard pill to swallow.” Nighteye stated, to which others hesitantly agreed. “And I don’t agree with some of the methods Joker used to... defeat those Angels.”

Mr. Compress scoffed, “Oh sure you don’t, you’d rather roll over for your new overlords as long as they’re ‘nice’ about it.”

“That’s not what I meant.” Nighteye’s calculating gaze met Joker’s, “How can you go from reacting to All For One’s death the way you did, to putting a bullet through a helpless enemy’s head?”

“We already told you normal Shadows aren’t human, the only exceptions are Palace Rulers.” Joker said, keeping his irritation at bay.

“I admit it was surprising, witnessing Joker executing the Angel like that.” Ectoplasm said, “However, looking at what we know now, it was the safest and most humane choice to make in the middle of battle. I don’t hold any resentment over it.”

Joker gave him a thankful nod.

Nighteye opened his mouth, but another beat him to it.

“Please, debating won’t get us anywhere.” Gentle Criminal stood from his chair, “It may be hard to believe for some, but it is the truth, and Joker handled the Shadows as he always has in the past.” His bright blue eyes scanned over the heroes, as if daring to make another challenge, “Don’t make the mistake of not believing him, or discrediting his methods, as La Brava and I did when we first heard the story.”

“Yeah!” La Brava leaned forward, her tiny form radiating strength, “One of our biggest regrets was doubting them! You’ve seen what they have to face, so don’t you dare back out on them now!”

“You guys...” Mona murmured.

“Fine. I’ll let it go.” Nighteye pinched the bridge of his nose, “But this aside... everything makes sense when put into the context of my Quirk malfunctioning as it did, since you’re an anomaly that was never supposed to be here in the first place.”

“Thank you.” Joker smirked, “Besides, it’s not all doom and gloom. There are a few fun little truths, too.”

Tsukauchi gave Joker a look as if he would regret his next words, “Such as?”

“The differences in time.” Joker said, “It was Christmas day when we fought Yaldabaoth. My birthday is in February. I’m technically 17 years and 4 months old now, but because we landed here in April, my 17th birthday has yet to come. Well, technically we were in 2016 and jumped to 2218 in this world, so I could be 219 years old here...”

Tsukauchi swallowed, “The... the both of them are true.”

“How does that even work!?” Present Mic yelled as he gripped his head. “That makes no sense!”

Nezu cackled as others stared off into space to digest that.

“Ooh, here’s a really fun one!” Mr. Compress grasped Joker’s shoulder, “Arsene Lupin is my distant ancestor, and since Arsene was Joker’s truest other self, that would make this not-17-year-old-boy my 20 times great-grandfather! In a strange, roundabout way.”

Tsukauchi looked as if he gained ten years, “True...”

“No wonder you two look so alike!” Thirteen said.

“Of course.” Mr. Compress preened, “Dashing good looks and master thieving skills runs in the family!”

“Speaking of differences in time,” Lavenza said, “Having multiple time-lines in our world is a common occurrence as well.”

Elizabeth nodded, “The guests Theodore and I have had walked the same path, yet were different people within branching timelines.”

“Shiomi Kotone was a girl who fought hard to protect her friends and loved ones, and made the ultimate sacrifice on the top of Tartarus to seal away Death.”

Elizabeth nodded, “Arisato Minato was a boy who put his friends over everything else, and paid the ultimate price at the top of Tartarus in order to seal away Death and save the world.”

Joker's heart grew heavy at the mention of Minato, the emotions coming from none other than Messiah Picaro himself. Ah, so Minato was his Wildcard. No wonder Theodore and Elizabeth looked pained when he first tried to ask about them, and Elizabeth's reaction to seeing Orpheus before.

"There are differences to the timelines of course," Theodore said.

"Minato lost a close friend to death."

"While Kotone saved that very same friend, but at the cost of him falling into a coma."

Joker's eyes widened, "Margaret? Lavenza? Is it the same with you?"

"Of course." Margaret smiled fondly, "In one timeline, Narukami Yu discovered the true identity of a serial killer and saved the world from a deadly fog created by Izanami. In another, he aided the serial killer in his escape and framed another. There are infinite combinations of outcomes."

Lavenza looked at him in concern, "There are some where you perished along your journey, one where you accepted Yaldabaoth's deal to continue the Distortions. If you sold out your friends to our world's Judgement, then Crow would've been successful in his attempt to kill you."

"You can't be serious..." Mona said, eyes as wide as dinner plates. "Joker would never work with Yaldabaoth!"

Joker pursed his lips, but said nothing.

"Unfortunately, it is true." Margaret gave Joker a reassuring smile, "But currently we cannot say how differently time runs between these various worlds, or how its affected in the space between."

“So, if I am to guess,” Nezu looked over the Attendants, “This timeline is an anomaly?”

“Precisely.” Margaret said, frowning, “It shouldn’t be possible to connect on such a deep level with entirely different worlds.”

“Our master might know.”

“Theodore!” Elizabeth snapped.

“This Igor you spoke of?” Nezu asked.

Joker sighed, “We kept him hidden before, but now we have to introduce him to you.”

Mr. Compress looked at Joker, “Spinner and I met him once, but it would be beneficial for everyone else. He is rather... intriguing.”

“Let’s meet Igor then,” Nezu said as he gave a stern glance to the few looks of hesitant doubt in the room, “And eradicate any last traces of disbelief. Shall we?”

Joker rose to his feet and used his Key, the room gained a soft blue glow and low clouds of fog clung to the floor around the heroes’ feet. The door opened with rattling chains as he disappeared into the ghostly mist.

Those who’ve been here before entered second. Others slowly filtered in as Joker reached the bottom of the stairs, shivering at the cold fog, the sound of chains harmonizing with Belldona’s unforgettably beautiful singing, the dreary atmosphere of a stone cold prison.

Midnight and Present Mic openly ogled, those like Ectoplasm, Cementoss, and Thirteen traded concerned glances and kept staring strangely at Joker. Vlad kept his scowl, but his unease was apparent. Yagi bordered on haunted heartbreak.

“Hey,” Ryukyu pointed behind Joker, “That way was closed off before.”

“Yes,” Elizabeth sneered, “To protect our master from intruders.”

“Enough, Elizabeth.” Margaret chastised, her expression softening as everyone reached the bottom of the stairs, “This way.”

They walked down the hall and reached the Velvet Room proper, Igor beamed at the appearance of so many guests. Joker leaned against the open door of his cell while the Attendants and Mona lined up behind Igor’s vintage wooden desk.

“Welcome to the Velvet Room.” Igor said, his bloodshot eyes unblinking, “My, my, what a crowd you’ve drawn, Trickster.”

Many stared up in awe at the vast galaxy swirling in the nebulous ceiling, their faces splashed with silver starlight.

“What is this place?” Nighteye gazed into the cell behind Joker, frowning. Aizawa and a few others had spotted his cell, looking unsettled.

“It’s a place between dream and reality, mind and matter.” Igor said, “It’s somewhere Wildcards can gain new powers to grow stronger throughout their journeys.”

“This is my cell.” Joker said, “It’s open now, but I got the full prisoner treatment when Yaldabaoth was posing as Igor. Striped prisoner’s uniform, iron cuffs on my wrists, a fancy ankle bracelet attached to a huge metal ball. The works.”

“You lock your guests in jail cells?” Aizawa growled, glaring at Igor.

“... Of course not.” Margaret said coolly, “The Velvet Room takes a different form for each guest. My guest was in a limo.”

“Elevator traveling to the top of Tartarus.” Theodore said, to which Elizabeth nodded.

Lavenza sighed, "The Trickster's Velvet Room was twisted into this shape by Yaldabaoth, and with myself being split apart and my master sealed away, there was little we could do to aid him."

"What's done is done." Joker stated, "Besides, I broke free with my own power and made this place my own."

Lavenza smiled warmly, "Indeed."

Nezu clapped his paws together, "Igor, if I may be so bold to get straight to the point, how is it that Yaldabaoth gained the power to trespass upon multiple worlds?"

"I don't know, even the Velvet Room doesn't have that power naturally. Yaldabaoth's new ability is a grave anomaly, indeed." Igor shook his head, "The only person who may know the answer, without asking Yaldabaoth himself, would be my master."

"Wait, what ?" Joker gaped, "I thought you were the real master of the Velvet Room?"

Igor chuckled as his eternal grin widened, "I am not its master, no. I was created by my master and given the charge to watch over this space and the guests who find themselves here. It was I in turn who created the Attendants to help with such duties."

Mona crossed his arms, "Can I ask who is the master of our master?"

"Philemon." Igor whispered. The name seemed to emanate from every crevice of the Velvet Room. After a moment of shocked silence, Igor shook his head, "You see, he lives within the realm of the collective unconscious, and once made a bet with his counterpart, Nyarlathotep, in a wager to test the strength of the human heart. You could say they were the catalyst that created Personas in the first place."

Joker's jaw dropped.

“They... created Personas?” Mona whispered.

“Indeed.” Igor sighed, “But I wouldn’t count on either of them to make an appearance. I’ve not spoken to my master in many years.”

“Our new prisoner might know more.” Theodore said, “I’m sure he’ll have plenty of valuable insights as to the well-being of Joker’s home as well.”

“He’s still quite furious about his captivity, and won’t give the answers we seek for quite some time.” Margaret added.

“Let him stew in isolation for a while and he’ll sing like a canary.” Elizabeth said with a smirk. “He still believes Yaldabaoth will swoop in and save him at any moment. How pathetic.”

Nezu wilted in disappointment, “I see. Then we must put that aside and focus on what we can do now.”

“Like filling in the MetaNav,” Joker retrieved his phone from his pocket, “But its different now.”

“Really?” Mona went to Joker’s side when he opened the app, “Whoa! It is! The design is all wonky and broken.”

“Before we needed the target’s name, location, and the Distortion. For example, Kamoshida’s key words were his name, Shujin Academy, and Pervert Castle.”

Midnight wrinkled her nose in disgust, “How lovely.”

“And now?” Nezu asked.

“The location is the same, but this time there are ‘Core’ and ‘Door’ options, as well as an option to ‘connect or disconnect.’”

“The ‘Door’ option may be the portals themselves.” Mona said. “But I have no idea what ‘Core’ means.”

La Brava hummed, “You can search the app’s history, right? Wouldn’t there be information there since we used it at the USJ?”

“Right.” Joker frowned as he found it, “Target: Magician, Door: Black Mist, Core: Quirks, Location: School. Connected to... it’s just a bunch of symbols.”

“I’m the target!?” Mona cried.

“Wait, Black Mist .” Tsukauchi said, “As in... Kurogiri?”

Joker nodded. “Yaldabaoth used Kurogiri’s portal to banish us.”

Tsukauchi fell into a thoughtful silence.

“If Yaldabaoth thinks you’re dead, then you wouldn’t be on there as the World, Joker.” Nezu added, “But I wonder why its set-up the way it is?”

The Attendants exchanged glances, and Margaret added, “We’ve spoken to the Trickster on this subject before.”

Theodore nodded, “How Yaldabaoth is slowly altering the rules of these realities through his unnatural meddling. These could be the ‘Keywords’ needed to target these specific worlds.”

Nezu grinned, “If the Door is the portal you came through... and our world’s ‘Core’ keyword is Quirks... then it could be the certain types of magic or powers specific to that world? The Location is self-explanatory but may take a lot of brainstorming nonetheless.”

Mona gasped, “Joker, try putting in another Arcana!”

Joker opened a new tab in the MetaNav, but froze.

Mona’s excitement died when his partner’s face crumbled, “I know what you’re thinking Joker, but I think we should try Oracle and Skull first.”

“Really?”

“Think about it!” Mona waved his arms, “Oracle’s abilities are invaluable in this situation! And... its unlikely we could sneak back to our world as is without Yaldabaoth knowing about it.”

Joker looked at his phone with a new determination, “Hermit and Chariot.”

“Match found.” The distorted voice crackled as the first category filled in.

Joker’s heart soared, and he and Mona stared at each other in wonder.

“Okay, so the Door.” Joker said.

Mona crossed his arms and hummed in thought. “The door they fell into was a shoji door, right?”

“No match found.”

“Uh...” Mona blinked, “So its not a normal shoji door?”

“Doesn’t seem so.” Joker thought back to that fateful moment where Oracle and Skull were tossed away, “It gave off a weird vibe, and it glowed from what I remember. There has to be more to it.”

“Glowing door?” Mona tried.

“No match found.”

“Door to heaven?” Joker said.

“No match found.”

“Spirit portal?” Joker guessed again.

“No match found.”

Mona sighed, "This is going to be harder than we thought. Just like old times, eh Joker?"

Joker placed the phone in his pocket, "We'll keep trying to fill in the words later, but at least we have a start."

Igor turned to the heroes, "You've all gained knowledge of the Trickster's true origins as well as a way towards the enemies and allies alike. Is there anything else you wish to know?"

"I might regret asking," Tensei looked around uneasily, "But how do you gain new powers in a prison ? You've said that when we were here last, but you never specified what you had to do, just that it was... painful."

Joker looked at Lavenza, "We could do a demonstration, but it's not pretty."

"We can handle it." Nezu clasped his paws together, "Anything to get a better understanding of your powers and what Yaldabaoth put you through to get them."

"Heck, we don't even know how he does it." Spinner added.

Joker saw everyone stare at him expectantly. "If you say so. Lavenza?"

She ran a finger down Compendium's spine, "Who will you fuse?"

Blue cinders fluttered around Joker as Alice and Black Frost appeared beside him. "You ready?"

"Hee, anything to grant you new strength, ho!"

Alice curtsied, "Of course, Big Brother."

Joker patted Alice's head and gave a high-five to Black Frost before they followed Lavenza to the other side of the room. The sudden appearance of the guillotines startled the heroes, as they weren't there when everyone first came in, only becoming visible when necessary.

Hawks paled as the blades glimmered in the pale light, “You can’t be serious.”

Belladonna’s singing flowed with everyone’s horror when Lavenza threw the blue shroud over Alice and Black Frost, dragging their wriggling forms under the precarious blades.

La Brava gaped at him, “This whole time whenever you got new Personas-”

Joker remained a calm mask of neutrality, “Yes.”

Spinner clutched Mr. Compress, Lady Stubbs shielded her eyes with a paw like a noble lady about to faint.

“We’ve heard the term ‘fusion’ before,” Gentle Criminal said, unable to look away, “But I never imagined it was like this.”

The SLAM of metal was followed by an explosion of writhing energy, which combined into a fierce Persona born before them. The Ultimate Strength Persona, a ferocious blue-skinned god bound in chains and skulls, his expression set in a thunderous scowl that looked as if he’d tear your face off as soon as you looked at him wrong. In his right hand he held a vajra, the arm raised as if to call down the fury of the heavens.

“I am Zaou-Gongen.” He spoke like the slow rumble of a splitting mountain, “I shall lend thee the power of three divinities. I am another angry mask of thee...”

He turned into a mask that flowed into Joker, his veins flowing with icy fire as the calls of the other Personas welcomed this new power into the fold.

Joker shrugged when the heroes gawked at him. "I told you it wasn't pretty."

Nezu opened and closed his mouth several times.

"Oh my god ." Hound Dog muttered, "You struck Nezu speechless."

"That happens once in a dozen blue moons." Power Loader whispered.

The rat regained his bearings, his black eyes peering deeply into Joker, "How many Personas can you fuse at once?"

"Nezu ." Aizawa snapped.

"I can fuse more than two Personas." A bubble of emotion flickered in his heart like a lone candle, the source was a certain Persona, "But... wait..."

Yatagarasu appeared on Joker's shoulder, "If the Devil wanted another demonstration, then use me. It is my time."

Joker raised a brow, "Your time?"

"Yes. Due to our power increasing from this latest battle, and from Messiah Picaro's own evolution, the path to my next self is made clear."

Joker felt it too. That candle building up in Yatagarasu over time now rose into a roaring pyre rivaling the heat of a volcano.

"Alright." Joker gave him an affectionate pet, "Let's do this, pal."

Yatagarasu nuzzled Joker's hair, "I'll need Ishtar, Kohryu, and Shiva to join me."

Joker slipped Lavenza the last of his cash to summon Shiva, and the four Personas went before four guillotines and donned the executioner's shrouds.

“I can’t watch this again.” Spinner said as he covered his eyes.

Cementoss deadpanned at Nezu, “You just had to ask, didn’t you.”

Nezu watched the next execution with a critical gaze.

Joker’s soul ignited when the guillotines fell, everyone but Joker and the Attendants ducked as the magic thrashed around the walls until they clashed in blinding rays of light. Joker shielded his eyes as warm sunlight replaced the soft silvery light of the stars.

Joker lowered his hand and gazed upon the dual Sun and Aeon Persona before him.

An empyrean woman smiled at him, her face painted white with crimson markings, her expression peaceful as her eyes burned with the golden glow of the sun. The white kimono she wore was rimmed in layers of crimson and gold, shimmering from the golden light she radiated. Her long ebony hair swayed in a black halo in contrast, and was decorated with a gilded headdress with celestial bodies carved into it. Joker’s eyes traced the moving smoke-like scarf floating above her shoulders, trailing down to wrap under her arms and out again at her sides.

“I am Amaterasu.” She said, voice commanding the warmth of summer, “As your mask, I grant you the life-giving power of the sun. Use it to eradicate the darkness and illuminate the heavens!”

With a flash of holy fire, she turned into a mask and flowed into Joker. His other Personas, awed by the power bestowed upon them by Yatagarasu, greeted her as one of their own. Zaou-Gongen bowed to her in respect.

The guests stared at Joker in unrestrained devotion, some seemed shell-shocked to have witnessed the birth of the most important deity in Japan.

“Now you have Messiah and Amaterasu!?” Spinner said after a spell of silence, “Dude, that’s totally cheating!”

“We need all the power we can get to fight against a god and his vast army of bloodthirsty angels.” Joker countered. “I bet the numbers at the USJ were only a tiny fraction of what we’ll face in the final battle.”

Mr. Compress tipped his hat, “Touche.”

Ryukyu cleared her throat, reverence simmering in her eyes, “So we’ve seen fusion, do you... need to do that when you get equipment as well?”

“Not with the guillotines, no.” There were sighs of relief, but Joker continued, “We get the equipment from the electric chair, train Personas through solitary confinement, and sacrificing one Persona through the gallows will strengthen another with skills or experience.”

Relief shriveled back into horror.

“... We don’t need any more demonstrations.” Vlad muttered as he pointedly glared at Nezu.

“Yes. We’ve received what useful information we could, at the moment.” Nezu looked around to blanching heroes, “Let’s return before we overstay our welcome.”

They needed no further instructions to turn tail and leave. Aizawa hovered near the hallway entrance for a moment, glancing between Joker and the cell with an inscrutable expression before turning his back. Nezu politely bowed to Igor and was the last of the heroes to leave.

“You guys go ahead,” Joker said to the Attendants and vigilantes, “I want to ask Igor something.”

“Very well.” Lavenza cordially nodded, “We’ll wait for you outside.”

“What is it, Trickster?” Igor asked when they were alone.

“Something occurred to me.” Joker shoved his hands in his pockets, his fingers brushing the phone in his right pocket, “The rift wouldn’t open unless the MetaNav interacted with it in some way, but the MetaNav had disappeared completely when we were first here, and you came through when my phone was broken by it. Did Mona regain his ability to let through without realizing?”

Igor leaned forward, “It was not the Magician.”

“Then...?”

“Did you happen to see a butterfly before the MetaNav appeared again? Before the Velvet Room returned to you?”

“I-” Joker stilled. He had seen one. Once. “When I... after I died and talked to Akechi in that strange dream, a glowing blue butterfly came to us and took me back. I thought it was just the butterfly from a Samarecarm, but my Second Awakening, the return of the MetaNav and the Velvet Room, the Red Rain at U.A., everything happened in quick succession after that.”

“... I see.” Igor unblinking eyes were deep in thought.

“Do you think it was Philemon?”

“I cannot say for certain.” Igor’s eerie smile widened, “My master has not made an appearance in several years, that much is true, but perhaps he decided to lend a helping hand in his own way. Humanity has always been watched by forces outside of our comprehension. Our situation may have drawn special interest from such beings, as well. Perhaps they are watching right now, waiting to see how this war between you and Yaldabaoth ends.”

Joker bristled, “Do you think Yaldabaoth obtained this power to access worlds from one of them?”

Igor's eyes sparkled in affirmation, "There's always that possibility, Trickster."

"Great." Joker muttered, "Thanks, Igor."

Igor nodded, and Joker left the Velvet Room.

The heroes and vigilantes turned to Joker when the Velvet Room door closed. They had already been affected by the truth, pinning him with all sorts of emotions, but all notions of hesitant disbelief were cleaved by a guillotine's blade.

Joker glanced at Nezu. "I have a few open slots that need to be filled now."

Nezu nodded knowingly, "Very well. I'll have extra funds delivered in the morning."

Power Loader sputtered, "So that's where some of our money has been disappearing to!"

Joker gestured to the godly gear hanging from their hips or strung over their backs, "The shiny new weapons and armor you guys have aren't free, you know."

Power Loader grumbled.

"Now everyone," Nezu said, "It's been an arduous day, both mentally and physically. And it's quite late. Let's adjourn for today. Rest. Eat. Compartmentalize the ground-breaking truth and our new mission if you have to. We'll have a lot of work ahead of us and we need to be well-rested!"

"What about the USJ?" Thirteen asked.

"Its in dire need of repairs." Cementoss added.

"Indeed, and it should be safe to do so. The readings have gone down to an all time low." Nezu retrieved his phone and showed the graph, “No spikes at all!”

“I wonder if it has to do with us using the MetaNav.” Mona said, “It could’ve stabilized the rift since it was the key to opening it in the first place. And since we closed it properly, it can’t run rampant anymore.”

Nezu turned to Joker, “What are the chances of the USJ having another unexpected incident?”

Joker hummed, “It’s unlikely, but I wouldn’t put it past Yaldabaoth not to get suspicious and try something after a while.”

“I agree, the rift closing doesn’t mean it isn’t still dangerous.” Margaret said, “We Attendants will continue guarding the facility while it’s under repairs and afterwards.”

“So you’ll keep us updated after we leave?” Hawks asked. “As much as we’d like to, sticking around U.A. for too long would make people ask questions.”

Nezu nodded, “I’ll give you daily updates and inform you immediately of any emergencies. Otherwise, we must act as if everything is normal around the students, and especially the media. The timing of the next stage of our plan relies on Joker and Mona.”

“Right.” Joker said, “Getting stronger Personas and a wider variety of gear for you, while filling in the MetaNav to reach our teammates in other worlds.”

Vlad let out a long sigh, “If that’s all, I’m going to go straight to bed. My brain is complete mush after this.”

“Yes, yes.” Nezu waved him away, “Good night, everyone!”

Exhausted heroes gave Joker and Mona glances of deep-seated respect and sorrow before they left. The vigilantes followed after a nod from Joker. The Attendants returned to the Velvet Room.

“Joker, Mona.” Nezu sighed when they stared at him, “It would be wise to start informing those you trust about your situation. Your unexpected departure might prove detrimental to them otherwise.”

“Hitoshi and Midoriya already know.” Joker shook his head, “But Eri... Risumi and Ayumu... everyone else...”

“It won’t be easy, but it needs to be done.” Mona said gently.

“... Yeah.”

“Plus one other thing.”

“What?” Joker asked.

Nezu straightened his spine while his tone morphed into that of a strict teacher’s, “While our plan relies on your pivotal role as the Trickster, you will make a promise to not run yourself into the ground in a blind rush to accomplish your tasks. I’ve watched people shoulder the weight of the world by themselves until it broke them, and I refuse to watch it happen to you. Am I understood, young man?”

Joker’s face turned red, “I promise I’ll take my time.”

Mona snickered, “I’ll make sure of it!”

Nezu deflated with a soft sigh, “Good. Now go get some rest.”

Mona returned to his feline form and Joker relinquished his costume in a flash of blue fire. Morgana jumped on his shoulder and they walked out of the empty school together, surprised at the night sky twinkling with stars.

“Wow, he wasn’t kidding when he said it was late.” Ren closed his eyes and enjoyed the breeze on his face, “You feel that?”

“What?”

“The Metaverse’s presence is weak.”

“It must be centered around the USJ now.” Morgana smiled as he looked around, “Our first mission was a huge success, in more ways than one!”

Ren smirked and continued walking. It was... quiet. Peaceful. A gentle wind rustled the trees, a few fiery leaves fluttered down onto the cobblestone path, marking the beginning of the end of fall and ushering the creeping shadow of winter. They reached the gate of the teacher’s dorms when a voice called to them.

“Ren! Mona!”

Ren looked down the path, “Midoriya?”

The boy slowed down with a pant, stabilizing himself with his hands on his knees.

“What are you doing here?” Morgana asked, wide-eyed.

“Isn’t it past curfew for students?” Ren added.

Midoriya caught his breath, sheepishly smiling, “I-It is, but I couldn’t sleep or sit still, and when I noticed the teachers return without you... well, don’t tell Iida I snuck out to make sure you were okay.”

“You thought the worst had happened.” Morgana said, flicking his tail.

Midoriya nodded, “So? Is everything okay...?”

“For the most part.” Ren’s eyes trailed to the dorm, “It’ll take the heroes some time to really understand what’s happening, but they’re not locking us up in an asylum, so that’s a start.”

Morgana rolled his eyes, “As if I’d let them.”

Ren smiled at him before looking at Midoriya. "Thanks for checking on us."

Midoriya nodded, "I'm glad you guys are okay! I should get back before Iida notices."

Midoriya rushed towards the 1-A dorms while Ren walked through the gate. Their hearts eased when they went inside and were greeted by a patter of small feet.

"Ren-nii!" Eri threw her arms around Ren's legs.

"Why are you still up?" Ren asked with a gentle smile, Amaterasu's warmth flaring at the presence of the Aeon Arcana.

Eri stared at him with her doe-like eyes, "I wanted to wait for you."

Ren patted her head, "Sorry. We had a lot to talk about with the heroes."

"Adult business?"

Morgana chuckled, "Something like that."

Kaito leaned against the wall nearby, "A few heroes came back and went straight to their rooms. Most of them were... not in the greatest mood. Mr. Compress said others decided to take long walks around the school grounds."

"It's not surprising after the day we had." Ren frowned as Nezu's warning replayed in his mind, and he knelt in front of Eri, "We're going to have an important talk. Not tonight, but soon. Okay?"

Eri's expression turned bold, "O-okay. I'll be a big brave girl, I promise!"

Ren smiled, "Good."

"Can you read Arsene Lupin to me?"

Ren's heartstrings tugged, "Of course I can."

They held hands as they went to her room. Marshmallow was asleep on the corner of her bed, cracking open an eye and chirping at their entrance. The white feline crawled over Eri as she got settled in bed, and it only took half a chapter for her to fall asleep.

Ren smiled sadly as her little arms were wrapped around Marshmallow. He tucked the covers around Eri's chin while Marshmallow began to purr.

Morgana grimaced as he continued to stare at her, "Ren..."

"I know." He patted her head before they walked out, shutting Eri's door softly behind him.

Kaito leaned against the couch, waiting for them, "When are you going to tell her?"

"Tomorrow, at the earliest." Ren dully replied.

Kaito's expression turned somber, "The sooner the better."

Ren turned away so Kaito couldn't see the heartbreak on his face, "Yeah. Good night."

"Good night."

The exhaustion hit them like a ton of bricks the moment Ren's door closed. He sagged on his door and groaned, "What a day."

"You could say that again." Morgana said, rubbing against his hair, "Come on, let's get to bed before you pass out on your feet."

"What about a shower? I feel gross."

"... Do you really have the energy for one?"

"No."

“Then let’s get you straight to bed! You can shower tomorrow!”

Ren chuckled, “Bossy as always.”

“Hey!”

Ren was out the moment his head touched the pillow.

Morgana curled up on his partner’s chest and followed him into dreamland.

“Okay, this whole silent thing really doesn’t fit you, Miruko.” Hawks said, his hands folded behind his head, “And Gang Orca... and Jeanist...”

Miruko was the first to stomp away from the gaggle of teachers, the others naturally followed as if driven by some instinct to stick together.

“I agree.” Ryukyu crossed her arms, “Are you alright?”

Tensei shared a look with Hawks at the continued silence.

Miruko led them to Ground Beta and stopped below the lone street light illuminating her. Gang Orca and Best Jeanist were behind her, the trio had not spoken a single word since they discovered the literal torture their kid went through in the interrogation room and the other hard truths revealed to them.

“Okay, you’re scaring me.” Hawks said more seriously, “What’s wrong?”

Miruko muttered something.

“What?” Ryukyu asked.

“It’s not fair!!” Miruko yelled as she round-house kicked the street light in half, the bulb flashing out as it crashed onto the pavement.

“Miruko...” Ryukyu uttered in shock.

“We took down those crummy smuggling rings together, went through Sapporo... Kamino...” Miruko furiously rubbed her eyes, “He died under our watch! We saw his body in the morgue, for fuck’s sake! We were separated for months before we reunited and fought Overhaul together. Now we know of all of the fucked up shit other adults put him through before we met him! We... we just got the kid back into our lives, only to learn we’re losing him all over again! I don’t even understand half of what he said and its just... so- ARGH!”

The street filled with silence after her scream echoed into the empty city.

Tensei swallowed as he looked to the others, “How do you all feel about this?”

Gang Orca’s fists were clenched, “I can’t say it doesn’t hurt.”

Best Jeanist refused to let his eyes up from the ground, his hand rubbing his stomach where he was gored in Kamino and subsequently healed by Ishtar.

“Everyone...” Ryukyu sighed, “I feel the same, but there’s nothing we can do.”

“How can you say that?” Miruko accused.

“Think of it this way,” Hawks put his hands up when he got the hot end of Miruko’s glare, “It’d be pretty crappy of us if we forced him to stay here, right? This whole situation is way more fucked up than we could’ve ever dreamed, but intentionally keeping him away from his loved ones is even worse.”

“But...” Miruko’s eyes flooded with frustrated tears, her voice broke like the fractured remains of her heart, “Doesn’t he realize we love him, too!?”

“Oh, Miruko.” Ryukyu wrapped her arms around the other woman, “Of course he does! This will be just as hard on him as it is on us.”

Miruko hugged her back.

Gang Orca sighed and ran a hand down his face, “In the end, this isn’t about us or how we feel. It’s about helping someone we care about safely return home.”

“And kick this Yaldabaoth’s ass.” Miruko muttered.

Tensei smiled softly, “That too.”

“We’ll miss him.” Best Jeanist whispered.

Tensei’s warm chuckle further softened the atmosphere, “That’s a given.”

Gang Orca looked to his comrades with a fire in his eyes, “We can’t let him know about this. It’ll only make it harder on him while he needs our support now more than ever. Failing him is not an option.”

“Agreed.” Hawks said with a wistful sigh. “We’ll see him off with smiles when the time comes, yeah?”

Tensei and Best Jeanist solemnly nodded.

“You feeling any better?” Ryukyu asked as she rubbed Miruko’s back.

“Not really. Sorry, I just-” Miruko broke off from the hug and furiously wiped her eyes, “Gang Orca’s right. I didn’t want Ren to see me like that and feel all guilty, those darn puppy dog eyes of his are way too effective.”

Ryukyu smiled and linked arms with her, “That’s okay. It’s better to get it out now rather than let the emotions stew. How about we go soak in the hot spring and have a girls’ night?”

A tiny smile blossomed on Miruko's face, "... Okay."

"We could all use some rest and relaxation." Best Jeanist looked up into the darkened sky, "It's been a rough day even for seasoned heroes."

They began their walk back towards the teacher's dorm, but Hawks had another idea to make his friend's smile grow.

"Hey," Hawks nudged Miruko, "I'm waving the white flag."

Miruko squinted at him, "What?"

"I'm admitting that pancakes are better than waffles!"

Her eyes sparkled, "Really?"

"Yup, really!" He forced himself to grin brightly despite the sadness raging in his own heart, "You officially win this war. Well played, my rabbit friend."

Miruko punched him on the shoulder, "Hell yeah! Ryukyu, to celebrate we're making pancakes tomorrow for breakfast!"

Hawks put his hand over his heart, "I'll eat a whole plate, just for you."

"Yes!" Miruko's smirk returned in full force, and she and Ryukyu listed off all the types of pancakes they could make.

The others smiled in opposition to the lingering hurt burrowing their chests, but one other emotion resonated within each of them.

The resolve to beat down this new enemy and see their kid off with bright smiles.

Ren awoke swathed in warm blankets, afternoon sunlight streaming in through the balcony doors. He sat up and stretched, working the knots out of his heavy limbs.

"Good morning, Trickster." Amaterasu greeted.

"You slept for quite some time." Satanael said.

Ren rubbed his eyes and threw off the covers, "Where's Mona?"

"The Magician woke some hours ago, but didn't want to disturb your sleep." Zaou-Gongen said.

"How sweet of him." Mother Harlot chuckled.

"We needed the rest after such an exciting battle!" Cybele said.

"Of course thou wouldst only focus on the battle itself, instead of the Trickster's well-being. How uncouth."

"Shut up, Odin!"

"Oh? Are we fighting!?" Fafnir raked his claws like a bull about to charge, "I'm going to win no matter what!"

"Stay outta this, wyrm!"

"We need not argue over a hard-won victory." Hastur whispered from the void.

"No, he needs to apologize for insulting me! Or perhaps I'll just skin him after all... a purple cloak would be lovely..."

Mother Harlot burst into hearty laughter.

Amaterasu's smile radiated tranquil wrath, "Behave yourselves, or else."

Messiah Picaro shook his head, "You'd all do well to listen to her."

Zaou-Gongen inched away from Amaterasu, “Her fury is terrible indeed.”

Mother Harlot, Odin, Fafnir, and Cybele withered under Amaterasu's motherly glare, and backed by Satanael's dangerous head tilt, they were outmatched.

“Okay, fine.” Cybele muttered as the fight died within her.

Odin curtly nodded.

Fafnir deflated with a disappointed grumble.

Mother Harlot sighed, “And just when things were going to get fun...”

Cerberus leaned over to Cu Chulainn and Vasuki, “The newbies are all feisty.”

Cu Chulainn hid his laughter with a cough while Vasuki rasped out a low chuckle.

Ren dragged himself out of bed by then, smiling at their banter. He retrieved clean clothes from his closet and headed for the bathroom, but stopped at the package sitting next to his door with an envelope taped on it. He picked it up and opened the envelope, mouth dropping at the sheer number of 10,000 yen bills inside. There had to be several hundreds of thousands of yen in here. By far it was the largest chunk of cash he'd ever held in this world.

He turned the envelope over to a sticky note.

I persuaded the staff to agree to a budget increase for fusions and a larger variety of equipment while Miss Yaoyorozu dropped by earlier to hold up her end of the deal! Inform me when you need more yen and catalyst items, or if there should be discussions for further increases, but remember what you promised last night.

- Nezu :)

“Of course he signs with a smiley face.” Ren said.

He tucked the bills away, the items from Yaoyorozu following after a quick inspection. Shower first, food second, then he'd consider who to summon back, and what Personas to fuse or execute next.

One long hot shower later, and he stepped out of his room.

The gentle conversation he heard through his door stopped on a dime.

He looked around the common area to see Present Mic, Aizawa, and Ectoplasm staring at him, the tension so thick it suffocated him. There was a clear difference between he and them now, and it made the room heavy and strange. Nobody greeted him. They just... stared. Perhaps they realized yesterday wasn't some wicked fever dream, that Joker mercilessly shattered their world views and broadened a horizon they weren't wholly prepared for.

“Good morning?”

Aizawa sighed as he returned to grading some papers, “Good afternoon, Ren.”

The man's usual callous and dry voice snapped the other two out of their stupor.

“Uh, the others are in the kitchen!” Present Mic said with an ear to ear grin, although the man himself was pale, “Get yourself some lunch before you go hungry, kiddo!”

Ren's smile tightened, “Right. Thanks.”

He turned his back to their stares and wandered into the kitchen. The vigilantes, plus Eri and Kaito, were crowded around a table, drawing. Hawks sat at the island, leaning over it with pained groans while his wings drooped to the ground.

“Hey!” Morgana grinned, “About time you get up, sleepyhead!”

Ren yawned and looked to the time on the microwave. It was just past 12:30.

“I’ll cook something for you?” Tobita smiled softly as he got to his feet.

“Thanks.” Ren looked to Hawks, “What’s the matter with him?”

“Ugh.” Hawks raised his head, “Too. Many. Pancakes.”

“Pancakes?”

Shuichi cackled, “Yup! Miruko and Ryukyu made over two hundred pancakes this morning and made everyone have a plate! Or in Hawks’ case, three plates, all with different flavors!”

“Too bad you missed it, Ren.” Manami said. “ We decided it was best not to wake you up.”

He shrugged, “Pancakes aren’t really my thing anyway.”

“See! Joker’s on my side!” Hawks groaned, “Eugh. Pancakes are heavy and soggy and they sit in my stomach like a rock for an entire day! Waffles are crispy and they have cups to hold butter and syrup properly! Admitting Miruko was right was a mistake...”

Ren patted him on the back, “You need healing?”

“Nah.” Hawks buried his face in his arms, “If Miruko sees I cheated then she’ll get all sad and angry again. I can’t do that to her.”

Ren’s heart sank, “Oh... was she upset about yesterday?”

Hawks waved his hand, “Forget I said anything. I’ll be fine... eventually.”

“If you say so.” Ren walked away and took a seat beside Eri and Morgana, “Where’s everyone else? The common room was almost empty.”

“Miruko, Ryukyu, and the others went with Cementoss and Thirteen to inspect the USJ.” Manami said, “Other teachers are helping the students clean up the festival.”

“Look!” Eri held up her drawing, streaks of gold and a lot of blue in the center. He recognized himself near the bottom of the page, “It’s your finale yesterday! Isn’t it so pretty?”

“It is. Great job.”

Eri beamed and set it back on the table to continue working on it. He and Morgana shared a heavy look. Tobita finished his omelet and lay a firm hand on Ren’s shoulder in support after he delivered the goods.

Shuichi and Atsuhiro scribbled frantically in some mock art competition in which Eri was the judge. Apparently, Eri thought Shuichi’s incomprehensible shapes were more pleasing than Atsuhiro’s refined smudges. He wondered if Yusuke would agree with her or not.

Despite their lighthearted antics, Ren ate in heavy silence.

“I was thinking we could do brainstorming sessions.” Manami carefully watched Ren, “You know, to fill in that app?”

“That’s a good idea.” Morgana said, “We did that with everyone back home.”

“I came up with some fantastic word combinations that will be sure to fill it in!” Atsuhiro said.

“Me too!” Shuichi beamed, “I can’t wait to see who’s right! It’ll totally be me!”

“Why you...” Atsuhiro playfully glared at his lizard companion.

Eri looked up from her coloring, “What are you guys talking about?”

And just like that, Ren’s appetite withered and died. He set his spoon on his plate and pushed it away. Ren gave Morgana a nod.

“Hey, Eri.” Morgana caught her attention, “Why don’t we go out in the garden, just you, me, and Ren?”

“Okay!” She hopped down and ran out.

“Do you need help with your jacket?” Kaito called after her.

“No! I can do it myself!”

Atsuhiro smirked in pride, “They grow up so fast.”

Ren stood up, shoulders heavy as if he were about to walk to his own execution. Considering he’s done that with so many Personas, this somehow felt worse.

Manami bit her lip, “I-I’m sorry. I didn’t mean to-”

“It’s fine, Manami.” Ren smiled at her, but it felt fake, “Its better we get this over with.”

“Are you sure you don’t need backup?” Tobita asked.

Ren shook his head, “No, we need to do this ourselves.”

“We’ll be here.” Atsuhiro said as he gave Ren a reassuring smile, “Good luck out there.”

Morgana hopped to Ren’s shoulder as they left the kitchen. Eri waited by the garden door, dressed up in a jacket with apples stitched on the front pockets. She bounced in place, smiling when they opened the door.

Crisp air greeted them and the leaves fell from the trees in a vibrant gold and purple carpet. The fountains were turned off now, so it was as if they were detached and isolated in their own silent little world.

“Ren-nii! The leaves are so pretty!”

Ren’s throat tightened as she threw a big handful of leaves in the air, her radiant smile wider than it was yesterday. His hands formed into fists and the pounding of his own heart beat against his ribcage.

How in the world was he supposed to do this?

Morgana shared his sentiment, but plastered on a smile as shaky as the leaves clinging to the branches.

“Eri, watch this!” Morgana kicked up a breeze to sweep the leaves into the air. Any still attached to the branches joined in gentle twisters of gold and purple. Eri laughed as she spun around with them until Morgana settled the leaves all in one big pile.

She bit her lip as she turned to them, “I want to jump in it. Is that okay?”

“Of course!” Morgana glanced at Ren, his smile full of plastic, “Why don’t we all jump in together?”

“Okay!”

Eri held onto Ren’s hand as they jumped into the pile of leaves. She popped her head out from the pile, smiling brightly as leaves clung to her hair.

Ren lay flat on the ground, letting the soft leaves cushion him. Eri copied him. Morgana was between them on his back, and they spent several minutes staring into the bare branches and the cloudless sky beyond.

The silence was too loud.

Morgana nudged Ren, uncertainty in his own expression.

“Eri-” Ren started.

“It’s okay.” Eri sat up and picked leaves out of her hair before looking down at her fidgeting hands, “This is the important talk, right?”

Ren grimaced. “It is.”

Fear returned to those big, ruby red eyes. An expression they never wanted to see on her face again, “I-I promised I’d be a big, brave girl. S-so... what’s wrong, Ren-nii? Does it have to do with why have you two been so sad before?”

Morgana’s eyes widened, “You knew?”

“Y-yeah, but you tried so hard to h-hide it, so I didn’t say anything.” Her eyes searched Ren’s face, “Did I do something bad?”

“No way, Eri!” Morgana cried, “You didn’t do anything bad!”

“Morgana’s right. I don’t know how else to say this, but...” Ren sat up and held her hands in his, his thumbs massaging her wrists, “Eri, we’re going to have to say goodbye soon.”

The garden lost the warmth and colors it held moments ago as Eri’s eyes widened, her little fingers tightening around Ren’s hands.

“Wh... what?”

“Ren and I are going to fight a battle, our biggest one yet.” Morgana whispered as a chilled wind threaded through the garden, “And... when that battle is over, we’ll be going home with our friends.”

“But... I... can I come with you?”

“No, Eri.” Ren’s heart beat faster as her hands trembled and her eyes watered, “You have to stay with Kaito and Hitoshi and the others.”

Her shoulders began to shake, “B-but you can come visit, right?”

Ren shook his head, “Once we go home... that’s it. We won’t be able to see each other any more. I’m so sorry, Eri, I wish things could be different, but-”

Her hands dropped out of his grasp.

Morgana looked on the verge of tears, “Eri?”

“Can I...” She sniffled as tears dropped onto the leaves, “I don’t think I can be a big brave girl anymore...”

“It’s okay to cry, Eri.” Ren held out his arms, but his stomach turned to a ball of ice when Eri flinched away from him.

The dam broke when Ren tried to reach out to her, a heart-rending cry tearing across the garden. She ran back into the dorm.

“Eri!” Ren and Morgana followed Eri back inside.

Faces poked out of the kitchen and the heroes in the common room shot to their feet as Eri slammed her door shut.

Ren knocked, “Eri, please talk to us.”

Morgana pawed at the door, a few tears plopping onto the carpet, “Eri...”

A hand pulled Ren away, and they turned to see Kaito with a grim expression, “Give her some space, alright?”

Ren looked behind Kaito. The heroes gawked at him, the vigilantes and Hawks, clutching the kitchen entrance with a green face, stared with pained expressions.

“... Right.” Ren gave her door another glance before turning away.

“What the heck just happened?” Present Mic asked.

“I told her we’d have to say goodbye soon.” Ren stated with a sour tone, stamping down the emotions boiling in his chest and throat, “Maybe I should’ve been more gentle with it.”

“Let’s face it,” Shuichi shook his head, “There’s no other way to go about it, especially to a little girl.”

“Give her time, Ren.” Atsuhiro said, “She’ll come around.”

A silence sunk its claws in the dorm. Ren couldn’t take it.

“I’ll be in the Velvet Room.” He bee-lined to his door.

“Wait a moment!” Tobita stepped towards Ren, arm reaching out, “You don’t need to go off alone. How about we figure out some Keywords together?”

Ren sighed, “Mona?”

“I’ll stay here.” Morgana curled up in front of Eri’s door, “In case she comes out.”

Ren nodded, and donned his costume in a dull haze of cerulean. He reached into his pocket and tossed his old phone at Tobita, “Knock yourselves out.”

“What about you?” Manami asked in concern.

“I’ll be fine.” His smile didn’t fool anybody, “I just... need some time to think.”

Joker shut his door to their worried gazes and disappeared into the Velvet Room.

A metallic scream shook the chains over his head, and he was reminded of the deep gouges in the stones at his feet. Joker couldn't contain his curiosity and, backed by his rather foul mood, decided to see what state Metatron found himself in. He wandered to the outer ring of cells until he came upon Metatron.

Hundreds of black chains sprouted from the cushioned walls and entombed most of Metatron's body, the tips of his bladed wings had been snapped off in what Joker assumed was an attempted escape, the gouges in the stones, violently torn fabric, and the burn marks inside the cell was proof enough.

Metatron looked up when Joker approached, still bearing the injuries from the USJ alongside a firm imprint of Elizabeth's shoe on his face.

"Cur! Demon!" Metatron spat, the chains grinding together at his fruitless struggles, "Come here to feel pleasure at my suffering? I'll show you, you debauched wretch, the power granted to me by my Lord won't allow me show weakness-"

The Voice Of God collapsed into his chains and hacked a wet cough, the sound of oil splattering on metal hitting Joker's ears. Metatron stilled after several horrible seconds, breathing stuttering and grinding.

Joker sighed, and before he thought twice, he channeled Cybele's power and cast Salvation with a snap of his fingers.

Metatron looked up at Joker, eyes wide as his marred skin smoothed over, "Why would you heal me? If this is some trick-"

"We may be on opposite sides right now, but I'm not the monster Yaldabaoth paints me as." Joker stated as he turned around. "Even I wouldn't let an enemy suffer like that. Sorry I didn't heal you earlier."

Metatron gaped as he watched Joker walk away, "This doesn't change anything!"

Joker threw a sad smirk behind his back, "I'll listen whenever you're ready to talk."

He left Metatron behind and walked into the main room.

Lavenza smiled at him, "You have quite the heart of gold, Trickster."

"You heard that?"

"Of course." Igor said, his own smile growing, "Showing kindness could be the key to changing Metatron's heart. He may not see it now, but he will in time."

"Right..."

Lavenza's brow crinkled, "Are you alright?"

"I just woke up and it's already been a rough day." Joker's chuckle felt hollow, "Can we get down to business? I have a few bonds I'd like to master on top of some fusions."

Lavenza opened the Compendium, "As you wish, Trickster."

Meanwhile, after the door to Joker's room shut with a sense of finality, Ectoplasm sank into his chair, his face falling into his palm as he cursed under his breath.

The rest fell into thoughtful silences while Tobita stared forlornly at the phone in his grasp.

Morgana stayed by Eri's door, listening to a little girl mourn the big brother she hadn't yet lost.

Thwack!

"Good!" A mighty voice called within the secluded clearing, "Remember the Trickster's teachings, keep your stance wide and your mind as sharp as your blade!"

Another sword rushed towards Hitoshi, one of many floating around the deity hovering over the grass in a lotus position. Hitoshi, to his credit, clutched Paradise Lost in a reverse grasp and deflected the next blade.

Sweat draped his body, but he kept eyes on Futsunushi as he readied his next strike, "Remind me again-" The song of sparks and metal striking metal filled the clearing as Hitoshi parried, "-why we can't just train normally!?"

Hitoshi jumped aside to avoid another sword.

Joker leaned against a nearby tree, with Zaou-Gongen and Amaterasu hovering on either side of him, carefully watching the battle. Messiah Picaro was sitting up in the branches above.

"I thought we'd find random sticks and start with the basics, but-" Hitoshi yelped as two swords slashed at him, one he deflected and the other he rolled away to avoid, "This is ridiculous!"

"Real experience will do you better than sparring with sticks, and who better to train you than the deity of swords himself?" Joker said with a smirk, "Besides, I wanted to get a feel for my new Personas. It's a win-win for both of us!"

"Oh, that's totally not fair!"

"Life's not fair, Hitoshi." Joker stated with a confident nod, "But remember you wanted to get better at using daggers, and this is the best method for it."

Hitoshi countered another blade, "This is how you learned, right?"

"Yep. It was either learn fast or die with Shadows."

Hitoshi stared at Joker in horror. The distraction earned him the flat end of one of Futsunushi's blades right on the back, pushing him down into the dirt. Paradise Lost fumbled out of his grasp and tumbled over the ground.

“Ouch...” Hitoshi groaned into the grass.

“Oh, you poor thing.” Amaterasu helped Hitoshi to his feet and wiped the dirt from his shoulders. Hitoshi gawked at her, face splashed by her sunlight, as she ruffled his wild purple hair, “Futsunushi, did you have to hit him so hard?”

Futsunushi recalled his blades to his side, splayed out like the ribs of a fan, “My apologies, lady Amaterasu, but the Trickster ordered me not to go easy on him.”

Zaou-Gongen chuckled, his face split in a terrifying leer, “He has the spirit of a true warrior. Going easy would be an insult!”

Messiah Picaro floated down, “It will leave a nasty bruise. Do you wish for healing, Moon?”

“Uh...” Hitoshi cleared his throat at the deities staring at him, much to Joker’s amusement, “Sure?”

Messiah Picaro snapped his fingers, much like Joker would, and Hitoshi’s whole body became illuminated in a pillar of rainbows. The Oratorio dissipated, and Hitoshi looked down at his hands.

“Wow.” Hitoshi looked at Joker as he picked up Paradise Lost, “How many healing skills do you have?”

Joker’s sheathed his dagger, “Let’s take a break. We’ve been at this for hours.”

The Personas’ bowed to him and vanished in a unified veil of cinders.

“You didn’t answer my question.”

Joker snorted, “Sometimes I think I don’t have enough. Though, there is one that scares me.”

“How can a healing power be scary?” Hitoshi asked with a raised brow.

“Amaterasu has several skills I’ve never seen before. She has Invigorate, Regenerate, and combined with a skill called Holy Whisper, it helps replenish my health and magic even further. She could use Prominence to summon a small sun and reduce this whole forest to a charred crater. But one is called Holy Benevolence, and it brings multiple people back to life at once.”

Hitoshi paled, “I eat my words. That is terrifying. Let’s hope you never have to use it.”

“No kidding.” Joker sighed as he released his costume and sank against the trunk of the tree.

Hitoshi frowned, “Are you okay?”

“Just peachy.”

Hitoshi deadpanned, “Yeah, you look absolutely fantastic and not like a teenager who fought for his life recently. Which, I’m still a bit salty you went off and fought a huge battle at the USJ without telling me. I would’ve helped out in a heartbeat.”

“I know.” Ren stared up at the fiery gold canopy, “But you deserved to enjoy the Festival with your family, not fight Shadows. We’re still dealing with the aftermath and the heroes... they just keep staring at me whenever I’m in the same room with them.”

“Look at how long it took me to come around to the truth, Ren. They’re heroes, they’ll get over it quicker than I did. Hey, at least you got a bunch of shiny new Personas to show off, right?”

“Yeah, I guess.”

Futsunushi was armed with One-Shot Kill and Sword Dance thanks to sacrificing Gabriel and using some Skill Cards. Paired with skills like Trigger Happy, Rebellion, and Apt Pupil, he was the Ultimate Magician Persona with a mastery of scoring critical hits.

Futsunushi, when Itemized, produced a long wavy blade blazing red from its own inner inferno. Bequeathing Hinokagatsuchi to Hawks over breakfast was like watching a child open the biggest Christmas gift he's ever gotten, the other heroes' jaws were on the floor as Nezu fell out of his chair from cackling.

Meanwhile, Zaou-Gongen received Gigantomachia and Arms Master from Cu Chulainn, plus Firm Stance and High Counter from other sacrifices. Ryukyu promised to use the Gigant's Belt sparingly after Joker told her the effects of a charged up Gigantomachia destroying a whole mountain during the Summer Camp.

Ren spent most of yesterday in the Velvet Room, and didn't come out until Mona barged in and threatened to have Mercurius drag him out by the scruff of his coat near dinner time.

Hitoshi's frown deepened, "The heroes' reactions can't be the only thing bothering you. What's up?"

"I told Eri we'd have to leave, too."

"Oh. How'd she take it?"

Ren shook his head, "She hasn't come out of her room, not even when I made apple curry. Kaito and Aizawa convinced her to open her door for food, but..."

"You know she'll come around, right?" Hitoshi said as he sat next to Ren.

"That's what people keep saying." Ren scoffed, "But they didn't see the heartbreak on her face. The betrayal. She probably hates me now."

“She doesn’t hate you!” Hitoshi resisted the urge to smack Ren on the side of his head, “How could she ever hate you when she loves you so much?”

Ren refused to look at Hitoshi, choosing instead to study the canopy, “I want to tell your parents next, but I’m afraid of their reactions. Especially Risumi in her condition.”

Hitoshi bumped Ren’s shoulders, “Are you sure? You don’t have to push yourself so much.”

“I’d rather give them enough time to process everything before its too late.”

“Alright, we’ll do it together.” Hitoshi stood and helped Ren to his feet, “They should be at their dorm still. Damn, this is going to be a hard talk.”

Ren snorted derisively, “You’re telling me.”

They walked together out of the forest until the dorms came into view. They hesitated by the front door, but with a confident nod they opened it and stepped inside.

“Oh, you’re just in time!” Risumi said as they were swept inside.

Ayumu sat at the coffee table with an open laptop, his grin falling. “Hitoshi, you’re covered in dirt! What happened?”

“Nothing, just training. What’s going on?” Hitoshi asked.

“We got enough donations, and a very kind offer from a company who has a daughter in 1-A, to get everything we need to rebuild the Blue Lotus, and then some.” Ayumu chuckled, “They’ll start after the initial paperwork goes through. We’ll be choosing a building layout soon and everything. Bigger rooms for our apartment, a remodeled cafe, brand new kitchen equipment. The list is endless.”

“Isn’t this exciting?” Risumi placed a plate of chocolate chip cookies on the coffee table, “Oh, I can’t wait!”

“Congratulations.” Ren said as his heart sank, “I’m sure it’ll be amazing.”

Ayumu exchanged a look with Risumi, “You’re doing it again, Ren.”

Ren sat down in the armchair and took a cookie, but simply stared down at it with a frown.

Hitoshi planted himself on the chair arm, “You might want to sit down for this.”

Risumi did so by her husband, gripping his arm, “What’s wrong?”

“Do you remember when I asked how I’m supposed to be okay with someone vanishing out of my life one day?” Hitoshi asked, expression turning sour as Ren winced, “It was before you signed those papers so I could be trained and eventually transfer to the hero course next year.”

“Yes, I remember that quite well.” Ayumu said, worry creasing his face.

“You never brought it up again, so we thought everything was okay.” Risumi glanced between Ren and Hitoshi, “Is this related to that talk?”

“Yeah. The person I was talking about was... well...” Hitoshi glanced pointedly at Ren, who looked up to see the realization on their faces as they pieced it together.

Risumi paled, “No...”

Ayumu swallowed thickly, “You never told us you were sick. I didn’t think you could get sick considering your powers and everything...”

“What? No, I’m not sick. It’s nothing like that.” A hollow chuckle escaped Ren as he barely kept his composure from cracking, “But the truth is still going to be difficult.”

Risumi took a deep, shaky breath as her hold on Ayumu tightened, “Whatever it is, you can tell us, Ren.”

Ayumu firmly nodded, “We’re here for you, okay?”

With Hitoshi at his side, Ren spilled the truth once more.

Atsuhiro glared at the phone with the teachers and other heroes gathered around it, “Gateway to the afterlife!”

“No match found.”

Manami sighed and wrote it down on the list, “Next.”

“Uh... I’m completely out of ideas.” Shuichi griped. “I already used ‘elevator to hell’, right?”

Manami flipped back on the list, “Yep, it was your first guess, actually. Which makes no sense anyway.”

“Hey...”

“Entry to Nirvana?” Tobita tried.

“No match found.”

The whole common room groaned in frustration.

“Boy, this is tricky!” Present Mic yelled.

“You’d think it’d be filled in by now,” Hawks glanced at the mile long list in La Brava’s hands, “We’ve been at this all day.”

Tobita rubbed his temples, “Did it take this long for any Palaces, Mona?”

Morgana sighed as he splayed himself out on the couch, “It took us a while to get Shido’s Keywords, but it was nothing like this. We must be missing something .”

Nezu sipped his tea, staring out the window in deep thought.

“Keep at it,” Best Jeanist stated, “We’ll get there eventually, right?”

“I hope so...” Morgana murmured.

Midnight looked to Aizawa, who planted himself by Eri’s door via his big, squishy sleeping bag, “Any word from Ren? It’s been hours . Maybe he has some new ideas?”

Aizawa sighed, “Hitoshi sent a text. Apparently, Risumi hasn’t stopped crying.”

“But they believed him?” Yagi asked.

Aizawa nodded, “With Hitoshi backing him up, yeah. They know what really went down yesterday, too.”

Kaito sighed, “We’re losing people who are important to us. Their reaction is understandable.”

Miruko and Ryukyu exchanged glances as the rest fell into a grave silence.

Midnight groaned as she melted into her chair, “Gods, this sucks . I just thought...”

Aizawa raised a brow, “Yeah?”

“Well, you know!” She got to her feet and started pacing, every hero and vigilante in the room watching, “I thought we’d have them for a couple of years before they were able to be heroes! Or Ren could be a teacher here because we damn well know how good he schooled us before the Festival!”

“I-I’m sorry. We never wanted it to be this difficult.” Morgana whispered, his ears drooping. “We never imagined we’d be leaving so many people behind, people that we care so much for.”

“Oh, honey no .” Midnight picked the feline up and hugged him to her chest, “We know its not your fault. We’re gonna miss you, that’s all.”

“I know.” Morgana’s eyes were wet as he looked around the room, “We’re going to miss you too.”

“Joker could’ve easily reached the number 1 spot for sure, had he chosen to stay and be a hero.” Yagi added wistfully.

“But the reality is we’re helping them get home.” Aizawa stated as he met Morgana’s gaze, “It’s illogical to dream up ‘what-ifs.’”

“Oh, come on Shouta,” Hound Dog eyed him, half in amusement, half in sadness, “You cant lay there and tell us you’re not heartbroken over the situation. You and Tsukauchi, both.”

Aizawa opened his mouth, but shut it moments later.

“That’s what I thought, you big softie.” Hound Dog said, to which Aizawa glared at him.

Morgana cleared his throat and Midnight set him down on the couch, “We could certainly use a detective’s skills for this.”

“Yeah! Where is Tsukauchi anyway?” Midnight asked.

“He left.” Yagi stated. “Nighteye, too.”

“Left?” Midnight gaped, “Without a proper goodbye?”

Yagi shrugged, “Apparently he had to file Joker’s half of the story in the records, and said something about checking up on Kurogiri, too.

Well, Joker's half of the story in our world, at least."

"What are we doing about... the rest?" Hound Dog asked.

"The other parts have been marked as top secret and locked away by yours truly!" Nezu returned to planet earth with his usual chipper smile, "Ren, Present Mic, and myself have already worked up a cover story for Mic's next radio show!"

Present Mic grinned and threw a thumbs up to the air.

"The public is going to riot no matter what lie you guys came up with." Hound Dog rubbed his eyes, "I can feel the headache its going to cause now."

They heard the door open and Ren walked into the common area. His eyes were bloodshot and he overall looked drained. He saw them staring and looked at the floor while Morgana ran to him, jumped on his usual perch, and rubbed against his face.

"You okay, kiddo?" Midnight asked softly.

"It... was hard, but I'll be okay." Ren glanced at Aizawa, his hands petting Morgana, "Eri?"

Aizawa shook his head.

"Oh." Ren slumped. He looked up and Midnight felt bad when he winced at their constant staring. "I'll be in my room."

"Wait!" Midnight approached him, smiling softly as he reached for his hands, "Ren, sweetie, you don't have to hide in your room. I know things have been... tense these last few days, but we're sorry if we made you uncomfortable and will do our best to remedy it. Right, guys?"

"That's right." Hound Dog nodded, "We'll work to be better during the rest of your and Mona's stay here."

“If not, I’ll kick their ass.”

“Shouta!” Midnight cried, but it put a thin smile on Ren’s face.

Atsuhiro straightened up, “Don’t leave me out of that, Eraserhead!”

“Merp!”

“What they said!” Shuichi cried.

“You did nothing wrong, Amamiya.” Cementoss bowed his head, “We are the adults who should’ve contained any negative reactions to your situation.”

“We’re sorry, Ren.” Miruko gazed into Ren’s eyes with unfamiliar intensity, “Stay in here? Pretty please?”

“Okay.” Ren deflated with a sigh, “Apologies accepted.”

“Yay!” Midnight dragged him over to one of the couches, “You look exhausted, kiddo. Hang out with Auntie Nemuri for a bit!”

Ren snorted, but he complied as they sat next to each other. “Any luck with the MetaNav?”

The heroes and vigilantes blanched.

“I’ll take that as a no.”

“Perhaps we need to broaden our realm of thinking.” Nezu said.

“What do you mean?” Morgana asked.

“You’ve used rather simple ideas so far. Mona, Joker, your world had multiple dimensions, between the normal reality and the Metaverse, correct?”

“Well, yeah.” Morgana said, “What does it have to do with this?”

Nezu idly swirled his teacup, "Perhaps this world has other natural dimensions in their universe in which they can travel between, not using a normal door, but one that doubles as some sort of passageway between realms."

Ren blinked, "So a bridge between natural dimensions in their universe, completely separate from our own worlds and universes all drifting in some ineffable and unknowable blackness?"

"Precisely!"

"I have such a headache..." Shuichi muttered.

"Join the club." Vlad said in exasperation.

Morgana wilted over Ren's shoulder, "This makes me even more concerned for Oracle and Skull, if they're really in another world with multiple dimensions. What if something really bad happened to them?"

"You can't think like that." Aizawa droned, "You know them the best, would they really just give up and leave you and your other friends behind?"

Ren smiled, "No, they wouldn't."

Morgana shook himself as if to rid any bad emotions, "They'd stick together no matter what. Though I bet Skull probably ran head first into a problem without thinking it through."

"I can imagine Oracle berating him for it," Ren said with a fond smirk, "But she'd support him anyway."

Aizawa's face softened, "There you have it."

The front door opened again and Gang Orca trudged inside.

"Welcome back." Ryukyu said with a smile.

“Dare I ask how it went?” Aizawa asked as he forced himself to sit up in his sleeping bag.

Gang Orca smirked, “Don’t worry, all the kids passed. Including Bakugo.”

“Did I miss something?” Ren asked.

“This year, I was asked to join in on Provisional Licence exams for students in various hero courses.” Gang Orca’s smile softened, “Students who didn’t pass the initial exam took supplementary lessons over the past few months to get a second chance at it. Bakugo was one of them. Although...”

“What?” Aizawa’s eye twitched, “Don’t tell me he did something stupid.”

Gang Orca chuckled, “No. However, after licenses were passed out, I was about to congratulate him, but instead he congratulated me on, and I quote, ‘Kicking the Shadows’ asses.’”

“Oh.” Ren played with a lock of his hair, “I might’ve let it slip during the Festival.”

“Wait a minute.” Tensei’s eyes were wide, “Does that have to do with telling Midoriya the truth?”

“You actually told Midoriya the truth before us.” Midnight gaped, “Like, about you being in a different world and everything? How did he take it?”

Ren shrugged when he was suddenly the center of attention, “It surprised him at first, but he said it made sense after stringing all of the clues together.”

Vlad stared at Aizawa, “I don’t envy your students, Eraser. They’re scary.”

Aizawa rolled his eyes, “And how did that reach Bakugo?”

“Like I said, I let the word ‘Shadows’ slip when Bakugo, Yaoyorozu, Midoriya, Iida, Todoroki, and Kirishima came to the Blue Lotus’s tent. The only thing they don’t know, aside from Midoriya, is me being from another world. I... haven’t told them yet.”

Aizawa took a deep breath and slowly let it out.

Tensei laughed, “I’m not surprised Tenya was part of the group.”

Ren nodded, “Like Midoriya, they offered to help when we need it.”

“I don’t feel comfortable having my students fight Shadows.” Aizawa said, his tone serious. “Not after the USJ was nearly razed to the ground.”

Nezu chuckled, “We shouldn’t send them away just because they’re students.”

“I agree. They’re Arcanas for a reason, Eraser.” Ren stated, “Plus, they were pretty adamant on fighting no matter how I felt about it.”

“Can you really turn them down?” Morgana asked, smirking at Aizawa, “Besides, they’re heroes-in-training! The extra experience will do them good, now that we know Persona Gear works just as good against Shadows as Personas themselves.”

“And we would do well to increase our numbers!” Nezu said. “Staying stagnant could prove fatal.”

Aizawa glared at Nezu, who vibrated in place with a wide grin. The man rolled his eyes and sunk into his sleeping bag, muttering to himself.

“In any case,” Gang Orca looked at Ren, “There’s something I wanted to ask you.”

Ren blinked, “Go ahead.”

Gang Orca looked at Ryukyu, who stiffened before his gaze returned to Ren, "I want to invite you and Mona, as well as any of the other vigilantes who wish to come, as my personal guests during the Hero Ranking."

"Hero Ranking?" Morgana asked.

"Ah, the annual party where heroes are officially ranked for the following year." Atsuhiro shook his head in disgust, "I'm afraid I'll have to miss such a lively event broadcast on television."

"Same here." Shuichi said, "No offence, of course, but it's not really my thing."

Manami and Tobita traded a silent conversation through eye contact.

"I don't know..." Manami said, "That event is so crowded. I don't think I'd do well."

"I'd like to stay here if Manami isn't going." Tobita looked at Ren in apologetic concern.

"That's fine." Ren frowned, "But what about the media? It was bad enough that one woman turned feral on Risumi during the Festival, what would happen to whole group of them?"

Miruko cracked her knuckles, "Oh, you don't have to worry about that."

Best Jeanist nodded, "It's a written rule that the media cannot harass any pro hero's guests invited to the event, otherwise they get a permanent life time ban."

"Besides, they've changed it up a lot this year." Ganr Orca said.

"How so?" Morgana asked.

"Usually, it's held in a massive stadium which would then be open to the public." Ryukyu said, "This year, the new head at the Hero Commission made it a smaller event. The Rankings themselves will still be broadcast live, but the event itself will be held in honor to the heroes and their families instead.”

“Hey! It’s good timing for us if you go, Joker!” Present Mic grinned, “It lines up with our original rendezvous over the radio, and since its such a hot topic more people are bound to tune in! We can watch the Rankings and go straight to my studio!”

Hawks smirked, “And we’ll all be there! I heard there’ll be a banquet before the official rankings! It’ll be fun!”

“Getting out of U.A. for longer than five minutes would do you a lot of good, too.” Hound Dog added.

Morgana and Ren shared a glance, before Ren said, “We can’t say no to that.”

“While you’re gone,” Atsuhiro snatched up the phone, “We’ll continue working on filling this thing in!”

“Then it’s settled.” Gang Orca ruffled Ren’s hair, his hand lingering a long moment before he reluctantly pulled away.

Ren frowned as he watched Gang Orca disappear into the kitchen, sensing some sadness within him.

“Hey, Ren,” Midnight held up her hands and waggled her fingers, “Can I... would be weird if I could...”

Ren chuckled as he leaned over, “Go ahead.”

“Yes!” Her hands threaded through his hair, “Oh my gosh, Ren! What’s your secret? Girls would kill to have hair as soft as this!”

“Ooh, me next!!” Miruko said as she rushed to Ren’s other side, “I want to feel!”

Ren’s face turned red as the heroes continued to dote on him.

“Hey, if Ren’s hair is this soft...” Hawks looked right at Atsuhiro with a predatory smirk, “Then does that mean your hair is equally as soft?”

Atsuhiro froze, “W-well, I-”

“You know, he hasn’t let us feel his hair once.” Manami said.

“That’s true!” Shuichi added.

“A distinguished gentleman takes his hygiene quite seriously.” Tobita smiled at Atsuhiro, “I’m positive it should be just as soft as Ren’s.”

Ryukyu’s grin turned feral, “There’s one way to find out.”

Atsuhiro slowly backed away, “Well, look at the time! I have someplace to be!”

“Oh, you’re not getting away that easily!” Miruko cackled as she charged at him.

The atmosphere lightened as a game of cat and mouse ensued between Atsuhiro and the ladies. Everyone else watched them run back and forth across the dorms, laughing at Atsuhiro’s ingenuity at avoiding capture.

That was, until Lady Stubbs got involved and tripped him by tackling his leg.

Midnight, Ryukyu, Miruko, La Brava, and Lady Stubbs each felt his hair and decided that it was just as soft as Ren’s, much to the man’s grumbling ire. He only softened when he saw Morgana and Ren laughing together with everyone else.

The only thing weighing on their hearts was the fact that Eri’s door remained closed, unknowing that the little girl had pressed her ear to it to listen to her big brother’s laughter.

“Have you told them?”

“... No.”

“Enji, you have to. They don’t even know about this yet.”

“I know.” Enji, for the large man that he was, looked sullen and worn. He reached across the table, but stopped when Rei tensed. The nurses nearby watched him like a hawk, ready to intervene if necessary. He set his hand down instead, their fingertips a hair’s breadth apart, “I’ll tell them everything after the Ranking.”

“I see.” A silence weighed on them as Rei studied Enji with her cold gray eyes, “About that, have you made your other choice?”

Enji grimaced, “I... haven’t decided.”

Rei sighed as she stood, “Whatever you choose, Todoroki Enji, I’ll be watching.”

She walked towards the hospital, where the nurses were waiting to take her back inside. Rei was gone with the beauty and grace of a winter’s first snowfall.

Enji never felt more alone as a quiet breeze whispered through the hospital gardens, until his eyes were drawn towards a splash in the small pond nearby. A black and white koi fish, which Rei told him that Natsuo named it Joker, stared at him from the water.

“I don’t need you judging me, either.” Enji muttered as he pinched the bridge of his nose, “And now I’m talking to a fish.”

For his own sanity, Enji left and cast his fate to whatever was in store for the Hero Rankings.

You know how Yatagarasu referenced Okami a couple of times now? Ammy was always planned for a late story Persona, but I never really liked Amaterasu's design in Nocturne(And she wasn't in P5 anyway), so I took some of her older designs plus just a tiny bit of inspiration from Okami and combined them for her version in DTESH. I've always wanted to draw this Ammy plus Joker's new costume sometime... but my art skills are definitely not up to par to give them justice. I'll also update the final persona builds in part 2 of the Thieves Den for these latest builds.

We'll be wrapping up the last of the BNHA loose ends within the next couple of chapters, and then... it'll be time :) There's still the chance that there will have to be one more chapter to properly space things, but we'll see. Some other things will also be covered in the Epilogue.

Now, as for why there's this early chapter and then another delay is that I'm moving, so I won't really have time to write/edit for the rest of June or July as I take care of everything and get settled in.

Plan for the next chapter update day is August 19th. I know it sucks to have such delays when we're so close to the end, but sometimes life just decides to hit you repeatedly and you have to roll with the punches the best you are able :D See you in August everybody <3

No More What Ifs

Chapter 93: No More What Ifs

“SOMEONE GIVE ME THEIR PHONE!” Ashido jumped up as if she were electrocuted.

Tsuyu chuckled as she held hers out. Ashido swiped it and bolted into the kitchen, giggling like a madwoman.

Kirishima gaped, “Are you sure that’s a good idea?”

Tsuyu shrugged.

We've surpassed 800k hits and 11k Kudos!!! Oh my lanta I never thought we'd ever reach those sorts of astronomical numbers!! Thanks so much everyone!

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

“Your hair refuses to cooperate.”

“Believe me, people have tried to tame it for over a decade.”

Best Jeanist sighed as he tucked away his comb somewhere in his costume, “And here I thought I could tame any hair after Bakugo’s.”

Morgana chuckled, “I don’t think a hairstyle like yours would look good on Ren, anyway.”

“Hey, I could own any hairstyle I wanted.” Ren ran a hand down his fluffy locks. “It just doesn’t want anything else.”

Best Jeanist looked strangely at Morgana, “Do you want me to comb your fur?”

“No!” Morgana scrambled over Ren’s shoulder, careful not to poke any holes in the nice blazer Best Jeanist made for Ren, “I don’t need any help grooming my own fur!”

Gang Orca, who sat slightly squished across from them in the limo, chuckled. His deep laughter reverberated through the small space, “Always the a feisty one, eh Mona?”

Morgana turned his nose up at them and began licking his paw.

Best Jeanist and Gang Orca smiled, but then traded a look that caught Ren’s attention.

“What is it?” Ren asked.

“There’s something I want to ask before we arrive.” Gang Orca leaned forward, the leather seat creaking ominously, “It involves Ryukyu too, but she gave me the green light while she takes care of her guests for the evening.”

Ren raised a brow, “Shoot.”

“Ryukyu and I began a villain rehabilitation program a while ago. Along with some other things, like affordable therapy for long term patients, children’s centers, homeless shelters and access to resources for them to get back on their feet.”

Ren’s eyes widened in wonder, “And?”

“We’d like your permission to name our collective organization the Amamiya Foundation.”

Ren’s heart warmed. “That’s... I would be honored.”

Gang Orca nodded with a toothy grin, “I’ll let Ryukyu know.”

Morgana snapped out of his obsessive grooming, “What’s this villain program, anyway?”

“Ryukyu proposed the idea after you opened her eyes to so many shades of gray. We’ve realized there are no programs to help people labeled as ‘villains’ to get a solid groundwork to turn their life around. It already has a few patients, guests which Ryukyu invited to this event.”

“Really? Who?” Ren asked.

Gang Orca shuffled, his fiercely protective eyes burning into Ren, “Himiko Toga. Bubaigawara Jin, villain alias Twice. Kirisame Koutaro, villain alias Mustard. Toga and Jin willingly turned themselves in after the Overhaul Raid, and Kirisame...” Gang Orca sighed heavily, “Ryukyu spent days getting the 14-year-old boy out of Tartarus. He hasn’t quite recovered from the experience.”

“Will you be okay seeing them?” Best Jeanist asked.

“They were informed ahead of time about me inviting you.” Gang Orca said carefully, “They’ve been through much, and are not the ‘villains’ you knew them as before.”

Morgana grimaced while Ren curtly nodded, “I’ll be fine as long as they’re not upset at seeing me.”

Gang Orca’s gaze softened, “Thank you, Ren.”

“No, thank you for reaching out and giving people a second chance.” Ren smiled, “The Councilor Arcana really fits you two.”

“Councilor?” Gang Orca asked.

Ren nodded, “Like Risumi and Ayumu who share the Strength Arcana, you and Ryukyu share the Councilor Arcana.”

Best Jeanist’s eyes crinkled with a smile, “To think, in such a short time there would be villain and vigilante programs. Hawks is throwing together resources to combat Quirkless discrimination as well.”

Ren straightened, “He is?”

“He has many connections in the Hero Commission and government,” Gang Orca said with a firm nod, “And as the number 2 hero in Japan, he has a lot of influence in the public. His main goal is to have laws made to protect Quirkless peoples’ rights to things like jobs and housing.”

Ren thought of those trapped in the lab in Sapporo, how Kagome mentioned she was working for Hawks full-time while Hawks himself backed up the others looking for better work. The relief at finally being financially stable was a great weight lifted from her shoulders.

“I’m... really glad.” Ren said as his face warmed in a genuine smile, a little knot of worry in his chest dissipating.

“Me to.” Gang Orca reached over to place a gargantuan hand on Ren’s fluffy curls, “You can leave everything to us, Ren.”

“We’ll take good care of things here.” Best Jeanists said softly, “You don’t have to worry about anything when you go back home.”

Morgana and Ren both nodded at that.

At that moment, the limo slowed to a stop and they could hear the dull murmur of people outside.

Best Jeanist put a hand on Ren’s shoulder, “Remember, the media cannot hound you.”

“If anyone bothers you, let us know.” Gang Orca nodded, “Really, the most hype happens when the top ten heroes are announced on stage. Until then, it’s rather relaxed. Hang out, eat some delicious food. The others should already be waiting for us inside.”

“And if it gets to be too much, Present Mic will leave early with you.”

Morgana grinned, "Oh please, we totally have this in the bag! Don't we, Leader?"

Ren smirked as he pet Morgana, "Of course."

The entire limo groaned in relief as Gang Orca opened the door and stepped out first. Ren heard the flood of voices shouting questions or demanding comments, all lost in an incomprehensible wave of noise. Best Jeanist, and another crazed wave of questions, followed.

Ren and Morgana waited within the safety of the limo until they gave the signal. The veritable wall of noise and camera flashes froze solid as he stepped out with Morgana on his shoulder, wearing a finely tailored dark blazer and dress pants, the blaring red 'GUEST' badge attached to his front pocket visible to all.

Ren basked in the irony as they walked towards the doors in silence, Gang Orca's footsteps thundering to his right and Best Jeanist's eyes sharpening on his left. These reporters, who had published all assortment of articles nonstop for the better part of the year, were blue in the face, shaking fists clenched around microphones or recorders.

He met Chitose's eyes as they neared the entrance, the woman's pencil snapping in her grip.

Ren smirked as he waltzed through the door with two of the top ten heroes in the entire country.

Morgana broke out in a fit of cackles when the doors closed behind them, "Did you see their faces!?"

"We figured you'd enjoy that." Gang Orca said.

Ren's eyes lit up, "You planned this."

Gang Orca bore a savage smirk of his own.

“We did.” Best Jeanist stated calmly, “We figured they deserved some just desserts after all of the trouble they’ve been putting you through for so long.”

Ren’s smirk widened as Morgana finally calmed down, “Perfect.”

“You’re all here!” Hawks bounced up to them, trailed by a grinning Miruko, “Did it work?”

“It did.” Best Jeanist replied. “Their faces were priceless.”

Miruko howled with laughter, “Serves them right!” She threw an arm around Ren’s shoulder, careful not to jostle Morgana, “Let’s get some grub! They set out a whole buffet and everything!”

They were led down a hall and into a massive ball room, the imperious ceiling rising high over their heads and the floor polished to a shine to reflect the hundreds of colorful heroes standing around, the constant chatter droning into a low hum. A grand stage took up one entire wall, a whole train of tables laden with steaming dishes on the other. Smaller tables were strewn around for the guests.

Morgana sniffed the air, “That food smells delicious!”

“At least you don’t have to hide in my bag, Morgana.”

“Yes! Miruko, is there tuna!?”

Miruko smirked while the laughter of the others were behind them, “Of course there is! They have all sorts of fancy shit here!”

Their entrance had not gone unnoticed. The hum of small talk bled away into silence as heroes stared at the teenage vigilante and his talking cat. Whispers broke out as the shock filled the room to the brim. Miruko’s arm tightened around Ren as her smile sharpened, causing many to turn away in a blind panic.

Ren didn’t mind, but he sent a thankful glance to Miruko anyway, who winked in return. She released him when they reached the buffet.

“Wow.” Morgana licked his chops as Ren snatched a plate, “Should we get the fish first? Oooh, look at that salmon! No, wait! Get the fried pork, Ren! Oh, but look at all of those delicious cakes! Lady Ann would be so jealous-”

“We’ll just get a little bit of everything like last time.” Ren said with a nod.

“Of course, you have to try the fried chicken!” Hawks said as he stuck by their side. Miruko wandered down to the table while Best Jeanist and Gang Orca loaded up on seafood behind them.

“Fried chicken.” Ren chuckled, “Why am I not surprised?”

Hawks pouted as he snatched up a whole chicken’s worth of fried goods from the table. Judging by the humor lacing the eyes of the staff on the other side of the table, they knew to be prepared ahead of time.

Ren gave in and got a piece, but Ren staggered before they could move down the line. Hawks stabilized him as Ren looked to the small form that collided with his legs, and some part of him hoped that Eri had somehow made it here. It wasn’t Eri, but another familiar face just as small as her.

“Kota!” Mandalay rushed through the crowd, stuttering to a stop when she saw who the boy was hugging, “Oh, Joker!”

“You jerk!” Kota stepped back, his eyes flooded with tears as his face turned crimson. He wore mask pins on his shirt and stickers on his hat, both in Joker’s new and old mask designs, and a pair of red shoes Ren was sure a certain green haired Chariot wore, “Do you know how sad I was, thinkin’ you died!? H-how the heroes said I-I couldn’t see you anymore!? How... how you didn’t show your stupid face for months !?”

Hawks held Ren's plate so he could crouched down, smiling sadly, "I'm really sorry. I didn't mean for that to happen."

Kota sniffed and crossed his arms, "Whatever. Just don't go dying again and I'll forgive you!"

Ren chuckled, "I won't be dying anytime soon. I promise."

Kota stared sharply at him, lips in a firm line, "Good."

Mandalay lay a gentle hand on Kota's shoulder, smiling at Ren as he stood, "I'm glad we could see you here."

Ren nodded, "How are the other Pussycats? Did you guys repair that mountain yet?"

"We're good." Mandalay had a look Ren couldn't place, calculating yet soft, "It's... still a work in progress. Pixie Bob regaining her quirk made it a lot easier, but even so restoring a whole mountain will take time."

"Yeah, sorry about that." Ren stated as he rubbed his neck.

"Don't be. A mountain is a small price to pay for saving the students' lives. I'm glad to see you again, Joker."

Ren nodded, and looked down to Kota staring back up at him, defiant. He looked back up to Mandalay, "Can you do me a favor?"

Mandalay blinked in surprise, "Anything."

"There's a little girl at U.A. around Kota's age. We rescued her from some villains..." Ren frowned, "I'm sure she could use a friend her age."

Kota's expression softened with a hint of curiosity.

"Of course." Mandalay smiled, "We were planning on visiting U.A. sometime so Kota could see Midoriya. He's been missing both of his heroes so much-”

“N-No I’m not!” Kota’s face burned, and he grabbed Mandalay’s oversized paw to drag her away, “I-I think the others are calling for us!”

Mandalay chuckled as she waved to Ren, “It was nice seeing you again. I’ll tell the others you said hi!”

Hawks blinked, holding out Ren’s plate, “Huh. Well that was unexpected.”

“I’m glad to see him though.”

“And to get a friend for Eri. I bet they’ll be best friends in no time!” Morgana stated.

“Yeah... hopefully.” Ren was about to turn back to the buffet, when something else caught his eye.

There was a thin man standing on the stage floor, directing the stage hands on where to place various items or set pieces. He had a messy head of vibrant crimson hair, and a fine tailored suit that spoke of wealth and power. The man paused, as if sensing he was being stared at, and turned directly to Ren with a curious tilt of his head. Ren didn’t know why the man pulled at him so much, the rest of the world seemed to tilt as Ren’s silver eyes met the angled, ice blue eyes of the stranger, piercing gaze unfettered by the man’s thin glasses.

They continued to stare at each other, the noise and all other people fading away until it was only the two of them. The man simply smiled knowingly before he turned away, and the spell was broken.

“Hey, earth to Ren.”

Ren jumped when Hawks waved a hand in front of his eyes, “What?”

“Uh, you were staring off into space again.” Morgana said, “Personas talking to you?”

“No. Hawks,” Ren pointed to the man on the stage, “Who’s that?”

Hawks’ expression brightened, “Oh, that’s Ryoto!”

“You know him?” Ren asked.

“Yep, he’s with the Hero Commission.” Hawks’ smile turned wry when Ren and Morgana stiffened, “Don’t worry, Ryoto’s one of the few good ones. He took over as President when Kunikazu ‘retired.’ He’s been whipping the rest of those sorry excuses into shape to make changes to the system.”

“So you know a lot about him?” Morgana asked, not understanding his partner’s sudden interest, but supporting him anyway.

Hawks frowned at his plate, “I mean, the guy technically raised me.”

“Raised you? But he looks so young.” Ren added.

Hawks shrugged, “Yeah, now that I think about it, he hasn’t really aged a day since I was a kid. Maybe it’s his quirk or something.”

“How can you not know his quirk?” Morgana asked, wide-eyed, “If he raised you...”

“I never asked, and as far as I know, he never tells people.” Hawks stared at Ryoto’s back, “He’s a good guy. He made sure there were bright spots in my life when the Commission trained me to be a hero, even going so far as to do it behind Kunikazu’s back. You know, he was the one to change how the Rankings were done this year.”

“... I see.”

Curious, Ren used Third Eye before Ryoto disappeared back stage. He paled when the man burned red in his vision, his aura exploding out to encompass not only the stage, but the entire room and beyond. Ren blinked, startled out of Third Eye.

"We've never seen such an aura like that, even when facing All For One." Satanael murmured when Ryoto disappeared from view.

"What does it mean? With power like that..."

"I know not, Trickster."

"Such a powerful individual working behind the scenes..." Amaterasu poured her courage into Ren, "It would be wise to avoid him. We have enough on our plate as is."

Hawks opened his mouth to speak when Miruko descended on them with a plate piled high with food.

"Oi! What's taking you slow pokes so long!?"

"W-wait!" Morgana cried, "W-we need to get tuna, a-and cakes, a-and rice, too! Just give us another minute!"

"Well, you better hurry up!" Miruko smirked, "The sushi is almost gone!"

Morgana wailed in despair, only calming down when Ren rushed to the sushi counter and requested to the staff for their best cuts of fatty tuna.

They gave them freshest slices from the kitchen. Given the not-so-subtle Joker pins on their uniforms, they were more than happy to do so.

"Your hair looks lovely, Toga. Are you using the conditioner I gave you?" Ryukyu asked.

"Y-yes! I've never had my hair look so shiny!"

Toga beamed in pride as she ran a hand over her twin buns, decorated with extra braids and flower pins. The silver sparkle of the bangle on her wrist complimented her scarlet dress, not many knew how the harmless looking piece of silver silenced the demons who'd howled for blood for so long.

"Of course she looks pretty!" Jin cried. He wore a suit and tie, and while he still had his mask on, the silver bracelet on his wrist silenced his own demons, too, "Anyone who says otherwise will meet my fist!"

Ryukyu smirked, "I don't think we need to go so far as that." The woman looked to her right and frowned, "Kirisame, you haven't touched your food. Are you feeling alright? Is the noise too much for you?"

The dejected boy had come to the facility late one night from Tartarus, haunted and buried deep in his shell. So different to the cocky, angry brat who walked into the League's bar months ago.

Toga swallowed. She really dodged a bullet by taking Gang Orca's hand that day.

"I'm... not feeling hungry." He whispered, eyes downcast.

"That's okay." Ryukyu put a gentle hand on his shoulder, and after all this time building trust the boy didn't flinch away from her touch anymore, "Eat whatever you can, but I won't force you to, okay?"

"... Okay." Kirisame picked up a small bowl of miso and brought it to his lips.

Ryukyu smiled at him in the same way it soothed the ache in Toga's heart.

That's just it. Her smile. Gang Orca's patience. The heroes and nurses didn't treat them like glass, or like crazy criminals to be locked up. No, they let her and Jin decorate their rooms to their liking, watched movies with them, let them paint and do enough artwork to cover the entire wall of the common area. One of the nurses even showed her how to braid her hair one night when she couldn't fall asleep, now wearing those same braids in her hair.

And therapy.

They didn't push her to breaking. Ryukyu once calmed her down from a panic attack after she told a story about how her parents treated her like a monster when her quirk came in. It was okay to not talk about it right away. It was okay to take it slow, to talk when she was ready.

It was okay .

They never scrutinized the clothes she wore or how she styled her hair. Never put her down for the quirk she was born with. Didn't shove her in a box and order her to stay there or else . Not once.

"Oh, there you are." Ryukyu looked up to the group approaching their table, "I thought you guys would be late."

"Apologies." Gang Orca set his dish down on the table, they all pointedly ignored the creaks it gave off. "Thank you for reserving the table for us."

Ryukyu smiled, "Of course. Where's-"

Toga's eyes went wide when she saw Joker, carrying a plate with a ridiculous amount of food as the cat on his shoulder licked his chops. They all froze when he and Toga made eye contact, the heroes behind him watching them both.

Kurisame stayed seated, while Toga stood. Jin gave her a concerned glance as she walked around the table, her shoes clacking on the polished floor.

Ryukyu slowly rose out of her chair when they were a few feet apart, brows wrinkled.

Toga recited this encounter over and over in her head, just in case she ever met Joker again, but actually seeing him, here and now, made all of her recited apologies burn away.

"How about we have a proper dance, my lady?"

"It's easy." Joker spun her around in a slow waltz. "Just follow my lead and you'll do fine."

He treated her like a human being despite making him bleed. Even after she... she hurt him in more ways than one during the Summer Camp. She felt her face heat up and her eyes burn. Joker looked at her in concern, but she bowed a full 90 degrees before he could speak.

"I'm so so sorry !" She ducked her head, oblivious to how Gang Orca stood between them and the larger crowd, how Hawks extended his wings to give their little corner more privacy.

"... What?" He whispered.

"F-for everything. I'm sorry!" Toga felt the tears flow, but she didn't stop, "I-I hurt you, tormented you at the Summer Camp... you were so nice to me before, you were the first one to treat me like a normal person, and I... I..." She shook her head, "Without you I wouldn't even be here right now! Without you, I... wouldn't have Hope ."

A hand touched her shoulder, and she looked up to see Joker smiling at her. He handed a handkerchief out to her with his other hand.

"I feel bad for making a beautiful lady cry." He stated softly.

Toga stood up straight, "Why don't you hate me?"

Joker tilted his head, the golden specks in his eyes glistening like liquid sun drops, "Because you've changed. You say I gave you Hope, but you're the one who chose to get away from the League Of Villains, to make that change for yourself." His smile grew as he urged her to take the handkerchief, "And Toga-san, changing takes real strength and willpower, something you already had within you. "

"Ren..." Ryukyu whispered.

"I'm only stating the truth, Ryukyu." Joker... Ren stated as she dried her eyes with the handkerchief.

Hawks grinned as he handed a plate back to Ren. "Let's sit down and eat before we all wither away, yeah?"

Toga collected herself and sat back down, clutching the handkerchief. Jin gave her a reassuring pat on the back as the rest of them sat down with their food.

"By the way, where's Tensei?" Ren asked as he fed the first strip of tuna to his cat, "I figured he'd be with us."

Best Jeanist pointed to another table across the room, "He's with his family, but said we could stop by whenever we felt like it."

"Eat first." Ryukyu said with a grin, "Then you can go say hi."

Their table settled with the clink of silverware on plates, and the atmosphere stayed light with pleasant chatter and delicious food. Ren engaged Jin in easy banter, even when the latter waved his arms around and shouted random questions. Gave Kirisame his full attention when he spoke, eyeing the cat strangely.

Ren playfully winked at her when he caught her staring.

Her face burned and she stared down at her plate. But she had to admit the flaming pyres of Hope burning within her heart strengthened. Some unknowable bond with Ren flooded his soul with Hope and new power. She held the handkerchief tighter, a smile spreading across her face.

Deep in her heart, she knew everything will be okay .

Endeavor wasn't the only one to watch Joker since he took his first steps inside.

Other heroes and their ilk kept staring. Watching. Whispers broke out as he talked to Mandalay and her boy, sat with his certain group of heroes, spoke fondly with former villains nestled in a table in the far corner.

Now, he was standing by the Idaten family table. The former Ingenium grinned and laughed alongside him, the matriarch had bolted from her chair the moment he approached, crying and thanking him profusely as she hugged him. The younger Iida, the one who was in the same class as his Shoto, rapidly chopped his arms and spoke to the vigilante with practiced fervor.

"Boss." Burnin' came to his side, expression serious, "We cleared the hallway for you."

"Good."

Burnin' grimaced as he began to walk towards the vigilante, "Are you sure this is a good idea? People are watching. What if-"

"Nothing will happen. I just want to speak with him in private."

"If you say so..."

Burnin' watched him go.

His heavy footsteps gave him away, and Iida Tensei was out of his chair and in front of Joker before he could blink. A hushed whisper overcame the entire room as scores of heroes turned into shameless onlookers.

“Endeavor.” Iida Tensei greeted as if his voice turned into acid, “Can I help you?”

Endeavor looked Joker in the eye, the gold in his sharp gaze glinting from the flames of Endeavor’s costume, “I would like to speak with Joker. Alone.”

Iida Tensei bristled, “As if I’d let you-”

“It’s okay, Tensei.” Joker placed a hand on the man’s shoulder and stepped around him. He pointedly glanced at Endeavor’s arm, where the scars from Kohryu were, before meeting his eyes once more, “If he tries anything, Amaterasu will gladly show him how hot the sun really is.”

“If you’re sure.” Iida said, expression grim.

The younger Iida gaped while his mother pinned Endeavor with a glare, and the sentiment was shared with the dark looks from Joker’s table. Especially Ryukyu when her eyes shifted into a dragon’s protective gaze. The message was clear.

Touch him and you die.

Joker followed, confident and suave under the weight of hundreds of gazes, into the private hallway his sidekicks cleared. The vigilante studied the hallway and pinpointed several exits, Endeavor could see the same sharp intelligence in the cat as it did the same.

Joker leaned against the wall, both vigilante and feline waiting in expectation.

He didn’t know how long they stared at one another, silence stretching into an eternity, as Endeavor’s own tongue decided not to work. All the raw emotions, the sacrifices these past several months, facing the deserved vitriol of his own children, the person who began it all waited patiently right in front of him and he just-

“Death suits you.”

Those words cracked the silence like thin ice.

“Excuse me?”

“Death.” Joker crossed his arms, his feline still staring, “Bearing the Death Arcana means you’re going to have major changes in your life, and from what I’ve seen, you’ve changed a lot this year. You’ve gone from attacking me in Hosu and the Musutafu Raid, to pulling out of the manhunt, down to supporting Nezu’s program when it came to brass tacks. You fought alongside Fafnir against the High-End Nomu. Now, we’re speaking face to face.”

“The Arcana...” Endeavor frowned, “I remember hearing this explanation before we took down Overhaul. You’re saying that I’m Death, in the same way my Shoto is the Hanged Man?”

Joker firmly nodded.

“Do any of my other children bear Arcanas?”

Joker set his jaw, “Todoroki Touya is the Reversed Justice.”

“So you knew. How long?”

“... How long have I known about Touya being alive?” Endeavor nodded. Joker sighed, “I’ve had my suspicions since those fires in Musutafu. We encountered each other during the Summer Camp, and he found me again before we fought Overhaul.” Endeavor didn’t know how to handle the pity in the vigilante’s eyes as they scanned the red-purple scarring weaving around the left side of Endeavor’s neck and crawling all the way up to his cheek, “He really doesn’t like you.”

Endeavor grimaced.

After a moment of tense silence, Joker spoke again, "Why did you want to talk to me, Endeavor? You're one of my Arcanas, but it's not like we're the best of friends or anything."

"I wanted to... ask for your advice."

Joker's eyebrows shot up, and even his cat blinked in shock.

Endeavor cleared his dry throat- damnit why was talking so hard - "How would you ask for forgiveness from those you love? I've not been the father or husband I should've, and my family has paid the price. I've been trying but... they still push me away despite my efforts."

"Do they know about Touya yet?"

"My wife, Rei, does." Endeavor sighed, "My children... do not."

"First, you need to be open and honest with them about everything ." Joker said with unwavering confidence, "Second, empty words don't mean much, but action does. What are you willing to do to show your sincerity? What are you willing to sacrifice if it means keeping your family together? How are you willing to 'die' and be reborn?" Joker's expression hardened in resolve, the vigilante's lips perking up in a smirk, "By that look in your eye, you already have something in mind."

"Yes."

Joker raised a brow, "If you already knew what you had to do, why did you ask me?"

"You're the one that started it all in Hosu, who changed the way I see how the world truly is... and how it could be better." Endeavor's hands tightened into fists as an unfamiliar heat burst within his chest, giving him the courage of a phoenix reborn from the ashes, "Hearing your honest words gave me the last resolve I need to go through with it. Thank you."

Joker waved a hand, "Don't go thanking me yet. You have a lot of work ahead of you, hero."

Endeavor firmly nodded.

The overhead speakers crackled, and the announcement came for all heroes to wait back stage.

"Well," Joker pulled himself from the wall, "I better check-in with the others before they think you murdered me or something. We don't want them missing their own time in the spotlight to hunt you down."

Endeavor huffed, "Me murder you ? The last time I checked, I couldn't even touch you." He held up his arm, "And Kohryu was the one to give me permanent scars."

He didn't say it with any heat or malice, and Joker smirked at the dry humor the hero injected into it. They returned to the too silent room and split off. The staff worked swiftly to put away the food, the tables, and to arrange seating for media and guests, though the honored guests were separated so no media sharks got the bright idea to sneak a picture.

Burnin' ran to him as reluctant heroes began to head back stage, oggling Joker and Endeavor as if they expected them to come back covered in blood, "You okay, Boss?"

He raised a brow at her, "Why wouldn't I be?"

Burnin' blinked, "N-no reason. They're calling for heroes to go backstage now."

"I've heard."

He walked around her and headed to where the others were, ignoring the hole Ryukyu was trying to drill through his head. He caught Hawks as they entered the back of the stage together, the both of them eyeing each other for separate reasons. Endeavor noticed the new flaming red blade on Hawks' back, giving him the iconic look of a flaming angel of vengeance. All of Joker's heroes had exotic equipment, and that didn't go amiss between Endeavor and the rest of the heroes.

"Congratulations, Hawks."

"Eh?" Hawks snapped out of his glare, "Congratulations on what?"

The bird's feathers ruffled when Endeavor offered him the tiniest of smiles before walking away.

The common room was filled with vigilantes and heroes who didn't go to the Rankings. They seated themselves on the couches as the television was tuned in to madness of the annual event, but they had it muted until it was time for the top 10. For now, they concentrated on a much more dire project.

"You wouldn't happen to have an example from that endless well of wisdom, would you, Nezu?" Atsuhiro asked sarcastically. "We've been trying since Ren and the others left this morning, but you've been staring off into space this whole time."

"I've not been 'staring off into space', rather running calculations based on what words we've used so far."

"Sooo?" Shuichi asked, scaly brow raised. "Any ideas then, wise guy?"

Nezu stared at the phone with his beady eyes, having been silent for hours, "Oh... perhaps something like 'World Penetration Gate!'"

"Eh?" Shuichi blinked rapidly, "It wouldn't be something that ridiculous!"

"Match found."

A beat of silence-

“WHAT!?” Many voices screamed as Tobita swept up the phone and gaped at it.

Nezu cackled as people leaned over Tobita’s shoulder.

“‘Senkaimon’ is what it says.” Tobita said, “How strange...”

“We just need the location now, right?” Manami said excitedly, “That should be easy!”

“Cafe!” Shuichi shouted.

“No match found.”

“Why would a world gate be at a cafe ?” Atsuhiro asked.

“I don’t know!” Shuichi threw his hands up, “I’m shooting ideas off the top of my head!”

“School.” Kaito tried.

“No match found.”

“Mansion?” Ectoplasm said next.

“No match found.”

“Oooh, a gym!!” Midnight shouted.

“No match found.”

“A library?” Cementoss said.

“No match found.”

“Merp!”

“No match found.”

“Good try, Lady Stubbs.” Shuichi said with a smirk.

“Please don’t be a brothel...” Midnight whispered.

“No match found.”

“Oh thank goodness.” She said.

“Ren said that gate looked like a shoji door, right?” Vlad muttered, “Japanese garden?”

“No match found.”

Everyone spewed their ideas for random locations, but the minutes turned to an hour and they were no closer.

Atsuhiro’s face fell into his hands and he groaned in exasperation,
“We get one step closer only to find ourselves in the exact same predicament as before!”

“Progress, no matter how slow, is progress all the same.” Nezu said with a beaming grin, “I’m sure Joker and Mona would agree.”

“I guess.” Shuichi sighed as he leaned back into the cushions and pet Lady Stubbs, “It looks like the top 10 ranking is going to start soon. I vote we have a break!”

“Very well.” Nezu swiped up the remote and unmuted the television.

“Oooh, the top ten are coming on stage!”

“Turn it up, Ashido!”

“Stop crowding me!”

Shoto frowned as his classmates surrounded the television, phone in hand. Iida messaged him explaining what happened with Endeavor and Ren, and that the both of them came back seemingly unharmed, but Shoto couldn't help the worm of worry wriggling in his gut.

Why would his father ask to speak to Ren in private, when he himself hasn't seen Endeavor since the Overhaul Raid? He almost regretted letting Natuso and Fuyumi know, and had to silence the chatroom between them.

Bakugo huffed as the number 10 spot was announced, "Who the hell thinks a washing machine hero deserves one of the top spots?"

"What, are you jealous because he'll be more popular than you?" Sero asked with a smug grin.

"Shut up! I'll blow that damn machine to bits!"

"Sure you will..."

Ashido shushed them as the number 9 hero came onto the stage and stopped beside Wash.

"Gang Orca!" The cheery announcer shoved a microphone at him, "How does it feel to reach the ninth spot!? Especially when you were in the teens last year, and ranked number 2 on the hero who looks most like a villain!"

"Honored. I hope to live up to the expectations set out for me and be able to pave a brighter future for the younger generations."

"Aww, how sweet! And now, for the number 8 spot-"

Shoto watched in disinterest as Yoroi Musha, the old samurai looking hero, took #8, while Crust took #7.

"Next up, this hero took a small hit to her reputation earlier this year, but proved her mettle and shot straight back up!" The Dragoon Hero walked to the stage, waving, and the announcer was on her within seconds, “Ryukyu, do you have an opinion on how much your ranking has changed these past months!?”

“It’s been... humbling.” Ryukyu bowed her head, “I’ve made changes in hopes to better myself and those I care for. Like Gang Orca, I want to create a brighter future for the next generations.”

“Oh, so it’s confirmed you two are working together for all sorts of beneficial programs!?”

“That is correct.” She shot a smile at Gang Orca, who returned it in kind, “I’m glad to have him as my partner in crime.”

“Noble goals, indeed! I can’t wait to see where this path takes you two!”

“Thank you.”

“Now, the #5 spot goes to-”

Edgeshot claimed the fifth spot with an agile, silent grace.

Miruko marched in at #4 with her head held high, her grin spread from ear to ear, and as with all heroes so far, the microphone was shoved in her face.

“I would ask how it feels to make the #4 spot, Miruko-” The announcer gaped at her fists, “-but I have to ask where in the world did you get those support items!?”

“Oh, these?” Miruko held up her fists with gleaming platinum knuckles attached to sterling blades, “Gifts from a friend!”

“A friend? Who?”

Miruko cackled, “That’s a secret! Let’s just say these babies sure pack a punch and leave it at that!”

“O-oh, alright!” The announcer cleared her throat, “Moving on to the #3 spot, The Fiber Hero: Best Jeanist!”

The man walked on stage and stood next to Miruko, a knowing look was passed between the two.

“Many thought your days as a hero were up after Kamino, Best Jeanist,” The announcer stated, “But you managed to come back and take the third spot! How do you feel?”

“I returned thanks to a certain ex-vigilante’s healing powers. Without that, I most likely would have to give up my role as a hero due to the injuries I sustained.”

“You mean Joker!?! He’s here today, isn’t he?”

Best Jeanist gave her a cold look, “I would prefer you not ask for more details.”

The announcer paled, but let out a shaky laugh, “O-of course! Now, onto the #2 spot, this hero soared to the top at such a young age and it looks like he’s here to stay!”

Hawks walked on stage, a casual smirk on his face, his vibrant red wings relaxed. But his wings weren’t the only thing to draw attention as audible whispers broke out from the broadcast.

“Dude, where did he get a flaming sword !?” Kaminari shouted.

“Tokoyami, why didn’t you tell us?” Ashido demanded.

Tokoyami’s feather’s bristled, “I... I did not know he obtained such a divine weapon. He did not have it last time I saw him.”

Momo pursed her lips as Hawks stood next to Best Jeanist.

“Uh... nice sword?”

Hawks winked, “Thanks!”

“Can I ask where you got it? Such an amazing support item... I’ve never seen anything like it.”

Hawks reached back and gripped the handle of the blade, a black charred ring on his finger glimmering in the spotlight, “Like Miruko said, I can’t disclose my source. However I can say that they put their heart and soul into creating them!”

Momo gasped and put a hand over her mouth.

Shoto exchanged quick, surprised glances between Midoriya, Kirishima, and Bakugo. After all, they were the ones who put the pieces together on the items being made from Joker’s literal heart and soul.

“What’s wrong, Yoamomo?” Tsuyu asked.

“Um...” Momo shook her head and ran her finger over Flit, who perched on her shoulder with a musical timbre, “It’s nothing. I believe Hawks made a pun, that’s all.”

Kaminari blinked, “I don’t get it.”

“Wow, that much is obvious! But now that I’m looking...” The announcer studied Hawks, Best Jeanist, Miruko, and Gang Orca, eyes glancing over weapons and new accessories, “All of you have brand new additions to your costumes! I never thought Gang Orca knew how to use a hammer, or Miruko with those weapons... the only thing I can come up with between you all is your connection to Jo-”

“Now now,” Hawks grinned, but everyone could see the knife’s edge to it, “Let not make wild speculations, yeah?”

“R-right, of course! Shall we move on to the #1 spot, then?”

Shoto’s chest tightened when his father walked on stage, and the man didn’t take two steps before Natsuo blew up the chatroom with insults. But there was something... off. Despite his new scars, Endeavor boasted unrestrained confidence and power, but something within his eyes spoke to Shoto.

Kinder, yet resolved.

Shoto couldn't tear his eyes away, his phone forgotten.

"It shouldn't be surprising that you finally reached the top spot after being #2 for so long! How does it feel to be #1, Endeavor!?"

"About that. I have an announcement to make." The announcer blinked rapidly as he took the microphone and stared directly into the camera, his blue eyes piercing right through Shoto. "I... cannot take the title of number one hero at this time."

All of his classmates' jaws dropped as a chaotic wave of questions exploded on the other side of the camera.

Endeavor cleared his throat, and everything went as quiet as the grave.

"Due to personal reasons, I'm officially abdicating the title of #1. I promise to come back and be a better hero in the next years to come, and will only take this title when I feel like its deserved. Thank you for your time."

Endeavor handed the microphone back to the announcer and promptly walked off stage, leaving all of Japan in a shocked silence.

The announcer floundered, "Er... well, we've never had something like this happen before! If that's the case, then Hawks is the new number one hero?"

"Eh? Eh!?" Hawks whipped his head around, presumably to stare after Endeavor. "That's what you congratulated me about before!?"

"A-and that would mean everyone here goes down another rank!"
The announcer tried holding everything together as frantic whispers trickled in from the reporters, "Which would mean the new 10th place hero is Kamui Woods, Wash would be number 9-"

Shoto startled when his phone began to ring and, ignoring the shocked gazes of all of his classmates, fled to the kitchen to answer it.

"What the hell was that!?" Natsuo's voice crackled in Shoto's ear, drowning in rage.

"S-surely there's an explanation?" Fuyumi stuttered.

"There damn well better be one! What the hell was all that crap about 'being a better hero'!? He hasn't talked to us, let alone shown his face for weeks!"

"... Ever since the Overhaul Raid."

"What?"

"Something happened during the Overhaul Raid. From what I know, he fought someone with one of Joker's 'friends'. And... Iida did say Endeavor wanted to talk to Joker in private at the event. That has to be connected somehow."

"Okay." Natsuo took a deep, calming breath, "I'll try and find out what Flaming Dipshit is going to do now. Fuyumi, can you call mom and see if she knows anything?"

"Y-Yes."

"What can I do?"

"Well, Joker is at U.A. now, right?"

"He's not here today. He's doing an interview with Present Mic in a little bit."

"Okay, stay put and listen to that interview! When Joker gets back, try to ask him questions, okay? He has to know something we don't!"

Shoto pursed his lips, "... Right."

"Let's keep each other updated, okay?" Fuyumi said, "We'll get to the bottom of this. We always have."

"Yeah, thanks Fuyumi."

Natsuo hung up first. Shoto and Fuyumi said their goodbyes and followed suit. He felt eyes on him and turned around to see Momo hovering by the doorway, keeping other eavesdroppers at bay.

"Are you alright, Shoto?"

"I don't know what's going through my father's head anymore."

Momo's smile softened, "Let me know what I can do to help."

"Really?"

"Yes, really." She placed both hands on his shoulders, "Your family helped me out when I needed it most, so let me repay the favor, okay?"

"... Okay."

"Do you want to go back out with everyone?"

"Yeah. Sure."

A hushed whisper overcame the common room when he and Momo walked out, but stilted conversation continued when they sat down at the couch. Many eyes returned to the tv, where the new President of the Hero Commission was closing out the Ranking. Despite the panic and shock, he handled the questions and outcries like a professional.

Hawks stood behind him with the other top ten heroes, expressions set in half-startled determination as the Rankings officially came to an end.

The news went on next, talking about nothing else except this supposed 'scandal' and theories on what could've caused it.

"It's everywhere online already." Kirishima grimaced as he glanced at Todoroki, "People talking about... you know."

"I'm surprised Joker's not involved somehow." Ojiro stated nonchalantly.

Shoto opened his mouth, but closed it. His eyes fell to his phone, waiting for Natsuo and Fuyumi, his mind scurrying with so many questions to ask Joker himself.

Momo sat up primly, hands folded on her lap, "It's not right to stick our noses into private business or stir up baseless rumors."

Shoto sent her a thankful look, and the others tactfully changed the subject and the channel. He didn't know how long he sat there, letting the conversations of his classmates slip over him as he fell into some strange trance. Waiting for his siblings to get back to him, wanting answers, yearning for the time to go faster so he could stand face to face with Joker.

Momo's concerned looks went unnoticed.

At one point, Koji placed his pet rabbit on Shoto's lap, smile warm and understanding. At another, Iida returned to the dorms, and any questions about the Rankings were silenced by both him and Momo.

Snacks and dinner were passed around, but Shoto was too focused on petting the rabbit's soft fur to eat.

It wasn't until later when Ashido gasped and swiped the remote to turn off the television.

“Hey, I was watching that!” Sero whined.

“Shh! Joker’s interview with Present Mic is starting!!” She turned up the volume on her phone and set it face down on the coffee table, grinning from ear to ear.

Shoto snapped out of his hazy bubble at the sound of Present Mic’s voice.

“Gooooood evening listeners! I’m Present Mic and as you know, this is Put Your Hands Up Radio! Boy, it’s been an eventful day, hasn’t it!? But it’s about to get more exciting because I have special guests tonight. Ones who gave me quiet a fright the last time they tuned in!”

“Sorry about that, Present Mic.” A voice they were all familiar with huffed with laughter, “But the dramatics were necessary due to the circumstances behind it.”

“Oh, I’m sure! But you’re not the only guest in my studio tonight. Care to introduce yourselves!?”

“You all know me as T-san.” Another familiar voice spoke. “And I’m sitting directly across from Joker’s partner in crime, Mona.”

“It’s Morgana! Morgana!”

“Morgana?” Present Mic asked, “I thought your name was Mona?”

Joker chuckled, “Mona is his codename, just like mine is Joker.”

“Gotcha! By the way, this is one of the few times you’ve been on air, Morgana! And it’s been a while since you’ve last been live on the air, T-san! One of the things Listeners are dying to hear is how long have you guys known each other?”

“Well... since the beginning, really.” Joker said.

“Care to elaborate?”

"They first called me to help spread awareness of Silver Falcon's corruption." T-san said, "We've had a steady partnership since. Let me tell you, it was a surprise to know that Joker's companion was a talking cat."

"Hey! I am NOT a cat!"

"But... you are literally a cat?" Present Mic stated.

"It's a bit more complicated than that. But I'm not just a normal cat, you know!"

"Well that much is obvious! Another popular question is, and you don't have to answer if its too sensitive, how did you and Morgana first meet, Joker?"

"We first met in a dungeon, and I found him locked in a cell."

Kirishima went pale, "... A cell ?"

Midoriya bit his lip, staring at the phone with wide eyes.

Ashido waved her hand at him, everyone else leaned closer in horrified curiosity.

"We were in a similar situation, so we busted out together with another friend of ours. We've been attached to the hip ever since."

P resent Mic's voice softened, "No wonder you two are as thick as thieves."

"Don't you know it." Mona... or rather Morgana, stated, "We'd do anything for each other, and that's that!"

"Like listening to him yammer on about sushi for hours."

"Hey! Who's the one who tells you to go to bed on time!?"

"Aren't they quite the pair?" T-san said, chuckling.

Present Mic laughed, "I think we're getting a bit off topic, so let's return to current events. You were there during the Rankings, right?"

"We were." Joker answered. "Gang Orca invited us as his guests."

"What do you think of the situation? You've commented before with T-san on your thoughts with All Might and the title of Number 1 Hero, but what do you think of Endeavor giving it up?"

Joker hummed, "As I said before, relying on a singular pillar isn't the way to go. Endeavor stepping down when he wasn't in the right mindset was a smart move in the long run. Plus, Hawks will make an amazing Number 1. As people have noticed, he is part of a particular group of heroes I'm fond of. As long as they support one another as a unified group, then there's nothing to worry about."

"I agree." Morgana stated, "Even a leader needs help and support from his teammates."

"Sooo you're saying that even if Endeavor, one of the most powerful heroes in Japan, is stepping down as Number 1, we're still in good hands?"

"Precisely." Joker's smirk was evident in his lilting voice, "Plus, Mona and I have been around U.A. long enough, spent time with their students and faculty, and I'd have to say the next generation of heroes are looking brighter than ever before."

"I agree! I would know, since I teach there!!" Present Mic said, "So, you spoke of how you and Morgana met, and what exciting thing happened today, but usually with guests I have Listeners call in and ask questions! Do you mind if we take a few calls before we move on?"

"Go ahead. I'd love to hear questions from our fans-"

"SOMEONE GIVE ME THEIR PHONE!" Ashido jumped up as if she were electrocuted.

Tsuyu chuckled as she held hers out. Ashido swiped it and bolted into the kitchen, giggling like a madwoman.

Kirishima gaped, "Are you sure that's a good idea?"

Tsuyu shrugged.

"Alright, first caller! You are on air with Put Your Hands Up Radio-"

"Joker, you cheat!" An unfamiliar woman caterwauled, "You rejected my interview during the Cultural Festival and now you go to Present Mic's crummy radio show behind my back-"

"Aaaand that's the end of that caller." Present Mic deadpanned, "You know who that was, Joker?"

"Someone who disturbed the peace when I was working at the temporary Blue Lotus during U.A's Cultural Festival." Joker sighed, "They caused a scene and had to be removed by security."

"Yeah, 'security' being Fafnir." Morgana stated.

"Ooof, I'm sorry you had to deal with her." T-san stated dryly.

"Next caller?" Joker asked.

"Right!" Present Mic responded after a click, "What's your name, Listener!?"

"Um..." There was a soft voice of a child, "M-my name is Matsuoka Takashi, a-and I have a question for M-Mona."

"For me!?" Morgana was clearly excited.

"D-do you have a Quirk? Besides... t-talking?"

"Er, well..." Morgana cleared his throat, "I have powers similar to Joker. Now, while my partner in crime can summon multiple deities at once, I only have one. Mercurius."

"Oh. Is he cool?"

"You bet!" Morgana said, "He has wind powers and he can heal! Oh, and I can turn into a bus, too!"

"He can WHAT!?" Sato yelled.

"Didn't Joker post something about cats turning into buses on his Spotlight a while ago?" Ochako asked.

"Yep. That's one weird cat..." Sero commented.

"He said he wasn't a cat though." Tsuyu said, "I wonder what that's supposed to mean, kero?"

Momo put a finger to her lips in the traditional 'quiet' gesture.

"Can I ask one more question?"

"You bet!"

"What's your favorite sushi?"

"Fatty tuna! Extra fatty tuna is the best!!"

"Hawks gave us an entire fridge full of tuna recently, and Mona ate it all in one sitting." Joker stated with amusement.

"Yep! I didn't even get sick or anything!"

"Wow, that's so cool!"

"Thank you for calling Matsuoka Takashi!" Present Mic ended the call, "We have enough time for one more caller before we return to business! Shall we?"

"Of course." Joker said.

"Caller number 3, what's your-"

"I bet Joker recognizes my voice, Mic-Sensei!!"

Class 1-A heard Ashido from the kitchen, her voice echoing over the radio.

"Well, if it isn't one of my favorite people from U.A's hero course."
Joker said, laughing, "What's your question?"

"What are you gonna do after you're done with the vigilante program? Are you gonna be a hero? Oh, if you are, then can you teamup with my totally awesome future agency so we can kick butt together!?"

"Hey, that's cheating, Mina!" Ochako yelled to the kitchen, her voice catching over the broadcast.

Most in Class 1-A chuckled, but those died down when the line went silent for far too long.

"Ah, well that's..."

Midoriya was the only one who didn't smile earlier, ducking his head to shield his eyes. It didn't go amiss by Bakugo or Shoto.

"What's wrong, Joker?" Ashido asked, suddenly on alert.

"We were going to cover this near the end of the interview." Present Mic stated, his lack of cheerfulness made Shoto's stomach sink, "But what do you want to do, Joker?"

Joker sighed, "It might be best to rip-off the band-aid now."

"Are you not gonna be a hero?" Ashido asked, her demeanor deflated. "Oh, but if not then are you going to work at the Blue Lotus after its rebuilt?"

"Neither." Morgana answered curtly.

“To make a long story short, Mona and I worked out a new deal with Principal Nezu. Now, there are more details to hammer out before our plan is finalized, but Mona and I agreed to give up our vigilante careers, and any chance of being heroes in the future, in exchange for going home.”

No radio show should ever air a minute of dead silence, but there they were. The only disturbances were other phones chiming with wild notifications. All of Japan witnessed Endeavor giving up the title of Number 1 Hero, and now learning that they'd lose Joker too...

The media would feed off of this for months .

“As a staff member at U.A., I can confirm this has been in the works.” Present Mic said, his voice low.

“You... are you forcing Joker to give up, Sensei?” Ashido's voice trembled.

“What!? No way!”

“No.” Morgana chimed in, “The heroes aren't forcing us to do anything. It was our choice, and ours alone.”

“It's true.” Joker's tone remained steady, but they all felt the biting undercurrent in it, “Mona and I have been apart from our home for a long time, away from all of our friends and family. We'll still be at U.A. for a while, and I'll do my best as a temporary Teacher's Assistant to impart my experiences while I can, but when the time comes we'll give up our roles and leave the future of this world in the capable hands of others. That includes Hawks and those in the top 10 and beyond, those who are currently training hard to be heroes, and anyone who chooses to stand up and do what's right.”

“We believe in everyone to take care of things when we're gone.” Morgana chirped, happy yet sad at the same time.

There was a click.

"Oh, it seems our Listener hung up..." Present Mic stated as Ashido walked into the room with her head low and arms slumped at her side, "Well, this would be the perfect time to take a break!"

"Wait, Present Mic." T-san interrupted, "Can I say one thing before the break?"

"Sure thing!"

"I've been in the media business long enough to know that several outlets will use this against Joker, that they'll twist his words and make it seem like he's abandoning people or running away, but let me tell you this." There was a small creak, as if T-san leaned closer to the microphone, "Joker and Mona shared their past with me before this interview and... how they got stuck here, and let me just say it broke my heart how much bullshit they've been through."

"T-san..." Morgana whispered.

"What I really want to say is, haven't they done enough? Don't they deserve to be reunited with their loved ones after being separated for so long? The rest of the world doesn't get to demand anything from a kid who just wants to go home and see his family, remember that."

Joker chuckled wetly, "Well, that's one way to put it. Besides, with my permission, T-san is writing a book of sorts about everything Mona and I have done here. So even when we're gone, people can look back and see where we started."

"That's right." T-san said. "It won't be out for a while yet, but everyone can look forward to it."

"And on that note, I'd say its time for the break! When we come back-"

Ashido tossed Tsuyu's phone back to her and then silenced hers.

Bakugo stood up, red eyes burning towards Midoriya, "You knew."

Midoriya's head whipped up, "I-I... well yes, but it's more complicated than-"

"That's what he told you before any of us!?" Bakugo stomped towards Midoriya, scowling, "That he's leaving !?"

"K-Kachaan, that's-"

"It has to do with the Red Rain, doesn't it?" Tokoyami interrupted, his eyes sharp. "Joker knew about it during the Festival."

"Wait, there was a Red Rain during the festival!?" Hagakure waved her arms wildly, "When!?"

"I'm so confused." Jiro raised her hand, "Please back up and explain how Joker even knows about the Red Rain in the first place. I thought the teachers were keeping it hush hush?"

Momo exchanged a glance with Iida before she stood up, "Everyone, there are some things you should know, things that Joker shared with a select few of us, but what is said here cannot leave this room. As a class, we must stand together, understand?"

Kaminari sunk in his chair, "She used the angry mom voice."

"Kaminari."

"Y-Yes, ma'am! S-sorry, ma'am!"

Iida chopped his arm, "This is serious! Any of you who cannot take this as mature heroes-in-training, leave immediately."

Nobody moved, all staring at attention.

Shoto stared down at Koji's rabbit as Momo began a trimmed down explanation of what happened during Joker's absence during his performance. Why they didn't see their teachers during the whole Festival. Though it was unknown what sort of enemies they faced, the term 'Shadows' was shared, and only that normal Quirks and support items wouldn't harm them.

When most of everything was shared, there was a short silence only broken with a familiar sigh.

Momo whirled around to the entryway, "Aizawa-sensei! How long have you been there?"

"The whole time." Aizawa deadpanned as he pulled himself from the wall.

"So... it's true, kero?" Tsuyu asked as she stood from the couch, "Joker knows the cause of the Red Rain, that he's... leaving?"

"... Yes." Aizawa stared into Midoriya's eyes, "Joker told us everything."

"This is why we gotta help him out!" Kirishima sprung to his feet, "We're not going to sit on our hands while Aniki fights alone! What do you say, everyone!?"

"Y-Yeah!" Midoriya said.

"I already promised to lend my aid!" Iida chopping his hands vigorously.

"I'm not being left out or left behind." Bakugo growled. "And I'll kick anyone's ass that says otherwise."

"I'd normally help a guy like Joker out," Sero stared, frowning, "But I feel like we don't have the whole picture yet."

"Sero's right. Let's get one thing straight." Aizawa's eyes sparked red, "Those... things we faced at the USJ made the League Of Villain's attack look like an infant's attempt at villainy."

"How bad can it be?" Ojiro asked, "Joker seemed fine if he was able to finish his performance."

Aizawa crossed his arms as something haunted entered his eyes. It was a face they'd never seen on their stoic and stern teacher before, and it made their nerves shoot up.

"Joker fought the leader Shadow while the rest of us got cronies, hundreds of them, and we sustained heavy injuries which Joker had to heal. One single attack from the leader left all but one of the zones completely obliterated. Thirteen and Cementoss will have to rebuild the facility from the ground up."

Shoto felt his mouth go dry as horror laced his classmates' faces.

"May I ask what these Shadows looked like?" Ochako slowly raised her hand, "If they're really as bad as you're describing them..."

"Angels." Aizawa said, "Joker fought Metatron while a couple of us fought Archangels and other beings I cannot put into proper words to describe."

"Wha-" Sero's jaw dropped.

"Angels!?" Hagakure cried.

"Aren't Angels usually the good guys?" Kaminari hesitantly asked.

"Not this time. They were cold and ruthless, their sole objective was to subdue us to let in an even bigger threat into this world, the one responsible for causing the Red Rain. The one who Joker will face at the end of everything." Aizawa let out a long sigh before he scanned each of their pale faces, "Nezu made it clear that your inclusion in this fight would be up to him, but you need to know what sort of danger you'd be putting yourself in before you jump in head-first. If Nezu lets you fight, and Joker shares the whole truth with you, I expect you to stick with your decision through to the end. If you decide not to participate, that's fine too. You won't be judged for backing out of something you don't want."

He let a beat of heavy silence pass.

“And it’s best to keep this all under wraps, or else you risk immediate expulsion. Do I make myself clear?”

Various murmurs of assent went around the room.

“Good.” Aizawa’s gaze softened, “You don’t need to make a decision right away. Take some time and think about it, but each of you let me know when you make your choice. I’ll inform Nezu when I have all of your answers.”

With that, he walked out.

“A lot happened tonight.” Iida stated as he adjusted his glasses, “And it’s getting late.”

“I agree.” Momo said, “Classes resume the day after tomorrow, so let’s all get some rest, alright?”

Ashido was the first to go upstairs in uncharacteristic silence, face set in dark determination. Others followed. Koji took his rabbit back as all but a two called it a night while lost in their thoughts.

“Shoto, are you alright?” Momo asked as he rose from his seat and faced the entryway.

“I’m going to wait outside for Joker. I have questions and he has answers.”

Momo pursed her lips, “Alright, I’ll wait here in case you need me.”

He offered her a small smile, “Thanks.”

Shoto took a breath of crisp cold air after the door closed behind him. He sat on the front step and waited, staring up at the pitch black sky twinkling with a few stars, hearing the whistle of a cold breeze through scraping branches. Shoto always enjoyed the cool autumn more than the heat of a blazing summer, as it reminded him of his mother. He could never get too cold anyway, due to his left side.

Time passed, and after a pleasant chill wrapped him in a bundle of comfort, he heard several pairs of footsteps in the distance. He shot to his feet and bolted towards the gate, where Present Mic, principal Nezu, Aizawa, and of course Ren and... Morgana were locked in the tail-end of a conversation.

“-and now we just need the location! The others have guessed a plethora of random ones, but none have stuck so far...” Nezu trailed off, as he was the first to notice Shoto.

“What are you still doing up and about, Listener!?” Present Mic cried.

“Todoroki.” Aizawa said, “It’s past curfew.”

“I know, I just...” Shoto stared at Ren, “I need to talk to you.”

Aizawa opened his mouth, but Ren waved a hand at him, “I’ll handle it, Eraser. Mona, you can go ahead to the dorms with everyone.”

Morgana’s icy blue eyes flicked between Shoto and Ren, “... Okay. But don’t be too late or it’ll mess up your sleep schedule!”

“Alright.” Ren smirked, “I won’t be long.”

Morgana jumped down from Ren’s shoulder and pranced towards the teacher’s dorms, the others following after a moment. Shoto waved him through the gate and they sat together on the stairs. He knotted his hands into fists as a silence washed over them, but for some reason, it wasn’t awkward or forced. Ren studied Shoto from the corner of his eye, but he waited patiently for Shoto to make the first move.

“Iida told me Endeavor talked to you during the Rankings.”

“He did.” Ren turned to face Shoto fully.

His gaze pinned Shoto to the spot. It was a small thing, Shoto thought, what he noticed about Ren’s eyes. When they first met after the USJ, the gold was simply content to swim around Ren’s pupils, staying small and hidden like a wounded animal licking its wounds. Over time, the gold gained strength and brightened in tandem to the silver. And facing Ren now, the gold and silver equally wove together in bright bands.

Some silver strands were longer, reaching into the gold, while the opposite was the same for the gold reaching to the edges of silver. But there was something... more. Small flickers of other colors shimmered through in candescent waves. There and gone again just as fast, nearly invisible for those who weren't paying attention.

Eyes not entirely human.

Shoto knew he was being studied not by Ren, but also by deities and gods so powerful they could level Japan with the power in their pinky fingers. But they don't, because the one who commands them has a real heart of gold.

"You still with me, Peppermint?"

"... Yeah." Shoto stared down at his fists, "My father began to change back in Hosu after encountering you, but it was during the Musutafu Raid that really cemented the catalyst. The one thing he wanted more than anything else was to surpass All Might, even going so far as to create 'ideal children' to force his goals upon."

Ren stiffened, but Shoto continued.

"Then the Overhaul Raid happened. He refused to talk to me or my siblings since. And now... what happened today." Shoto stared into Ren's eyes with determination of his own while squaring his shoulders, "What was the final straw that made him give up being the role of number one after decades of trying? Was it something you said to him today?"

"Todoroki..."

"You can call me Shoto."

Ren pursed his lips, "Shoto. I know what he had to do during the Overhaul Raid. I believe that was the final straw, as you say, for him to give it up and focus more on his personal life."

"Then tell me." Shoto insisted.

"I could." Ren's expression softened, "But this is a conversation you need to have with him and the rest of your family, not me."

"No." Shoto felt the rise of anger flaring in his chest, "I'm done playing his games. Don't I deserve to know why he's been hiding? Don't I deserve to know why he gave up his life long dream at the drop of a hat? Just... why?"

Shoto's throat felt tight, frost blooming on the tips of his fingers, but his gaze was unwavering.

Ren studied him for a few moments more, and then sighed. "Alright, but you should brace yourself because it's not an easy pill to swallow."

Shoto nodded.

"You remember Dabi, don't you?"

"The villain with the fire quirk from the Summer Camp."

Ren nodded, "He's also responsible for those fires around town a while ago, and he was the one who fought Endeavor during the Overhaul Raid."

Shoto's brows furrowed, "Okay?"

"I don't know every detail, but from what I heard from other heroes is that Endeavor's been spending a lot of time in Tartarus... with Dabi."

Shoto's face scrunched, "I don't understand."

“Shoto.” Ren gave him an expression he couldn’t read, the colors of his eyes dancing like aurora, “Your brother, Touya, isn’t dead.”

A beat of silence.

Then, the puzzle pieces snapped together and caused him to violently flinch, “No .”

“Shoto-”

“That can’t be... he’s...” Shoto expression dropped as he absorbed the seriousness in Ren’s posture, some innate instinct within Shoto knew it was the truth. How Dabi taunted him during the Summer Camp, how those piercing blue eyes felt so familiar. “... How long have you known?”

“The Musutafu fires. Cerberus said he felt the same soul in those flames as he did with Endeavor’s fire in Hosu. I knew those fires wouldn’t be caused by you or Endeavor, so I did some research on your family and put two and two together.”

“And Endeavor?” Shoto poured all of his willpower to not make his voice tremble.

“The Overhaul Raid.” Ren shook his head, “Dabi tormented him with the truth during their encounter. It... wasn’t pretty.”

A numbness that had nothing to do with the autumn chill overtook Shoto’s body. He felt himself stand up in a strange haze, Ren standing with him, hand outstretched.

“... Thank you for being honest with me.” He stated as he turned towards the door.

“Shoto.”

He turned to see Ren frowning at him, but it was a small comfort when his expression held no pity.

“It might not be my place to suggest this, but hear your father out when he tells you everything, okay?”

“... Okay.” Shoto went back into the dorms.

“Shoto, what’s wrong?” He blinked and suddenly Momo was standing in front of him, her hands on his shoulders in obvious concern. Flit hovered around him nervously, her wings tinkling with musical notes. “What happened out there?”

Shoto’s phone rang in his pocket. He took it out and just stared as Fuyumi’s number rolled across the screen.

“Do you need me to answer it?” Momo murmured.

“Please.”

She took it and held it up to her ear, “... Hello? No, Shoto is here but he’s... yes, I understand... No, tomorrow is our last day off before classes resume. Okay, I’ll let him know.”

Momo hung up and gently placed the phone back in his hand, “What did she say?”

“She found out something important from your mother? Whatever it is, it doesn’t sound good. She’s going to pick you up tomorrow to go to the hospital with Natsuo, something about... an emergency family meeting?”

“... Oh.”

“Did Joker have answers?”

Shoto dully nodded.

“Do you think you’ll be able to sleep tonight?”

“No.”

“That’s okay.” She smiled and took his hand, Flit still zooming around them, “Let’s have some tea and soba in the kitchen, alright? We can talk, or just sit together in peace and quiet. Whichever you prefer.”

Shoto followed her to the kitchen, and soon after the familiar smells of Imperial Golden Tips tea and soba hit him. They ate their late night snack at one of the tables, sitting shoulder to shoulder as Shoto’s mind continued to turn. Her constant touch grounded him, but his own mind continued to torment him until he couldn’t take it anymore.

“Can you...” He cleared his throat when his voice cracked, “Can you talk?”

“About?”

“Anything.”

She leaned closer and spoke of nothing and everything. Her voice was soothing to the point where he could just sink into it. That, alongside her soba and tea, slowly brought him out of his own head.

After a long while, he finally looked up at her, “Momo.”

“What is it?”

“Thank you.”

Her genuine smile made her eyes sparkle, “Of course. You were there for me when I was at my lowest, so let me be the one to support you this time. Just remember that whatever is wrong, Shoto, we’ll get through it, okay?”

“... Okay.”

Ren withheld a sigh as he stepped into the dorms.

“Is everything alright?” Morgana was the first to approach Ren and clamber up to his usual perch.

“I don’t know.” Ren rubbed the back of his neck, “That family has gone through a lot.”

“Did you tell him about Dabi?” Nezu asked as he sat on one of the couches with a cup of tea.

Ren nodded.

“Ah, well, it’s best to leave their personal matters up to them from this point on.” Nezu stared down into his teacup, “I already received an email from Todoroki’s sister about picking him up tomorrow, to which I happily obliged of course.”

“I see.” Ren glanced at Aizawa, “Any luck with Eri?”

Aizawa opened his mouth when Eri’s door burst open. It was loud enough to rouse the whole dorm, but Ren didn’t care as she crashed into his legs.

His eyes were blown wide as she jumped back, staring up at him with watery eyes, yet they held every ounce of fire within her body. In one hand she held a piece of paper, and Ren couldn’t make out the colorful picture before she spoke.

“Can... can you come down here?” She asked.

Ren knelt, both he and Morgana wide-eyed.

She puffed out her chest before she held up her drawing. It was all of this world’s Phantom Thieves standing together, holding hands. Kaito and Eri were in the middle, either holding hands with Ren in his Joker costume. Eri’s version of Satanael and Kohryu were behind them. A big heart surrounded around all of them in varying shade of pink and red.

“This is...” Morgana whispered.

“I-It’s all of us together!” She cried, “S-So even if y-you’re far away, even i-if we can’t s-see each other a-anymore, we’ll never forget each other! B-Because I’ll never forget my big brother! Not ever!”

“Eri...” Ren said, nearly struck speechless.

“S-so you take this picture I drew so you don’t ever forget us! Okay!?”

Ren took it in his hands, a warm smile forming on his face. He looked up from the picture and held out his other hand to her, pinky raised.

“I’ll keep this close to my heart and I’ll never forget you, or any of the others.” His smile turned into a bright grin, “It’s a pinky promise.”

“Hey, don’t leave me out!” Morgana yowled as he held out his paw, too.

Her nervous smile finally matched Ren’s grin, and she locked both of her pinkies to theirs and they all shook once.

“Can you...” Eri bit her lip.

“What?”

“Can you read more of Arsene Lupin? Or teach me more french so I can learn to read it myself after... after you’re gone?”

“Of course.” He said as he stood up, she threaded his hand in his as they turned towards her open door.

He stopped and glanced around the common room. Teachers and vigilantes came to see what the noise was about, they all stood in place with varying degrees of cuteness overload. Aizawa had clamped his hand over Present Mic’s mouth, probably as not to disturb the moment.

At his look, they all scattered like teenagers caught at a party.

The last thing they heard before they closed Eri's door was Nezu's cackles.

Crayons and paper were scattered around her room, with so many copies of the picture he now held in his hand.

"Oh, th-those were just practice ones!" Eri said as she rushed to straighten out her art supplies, "It had to be perfect!"

"Don't worry about it. I think they're all perfect!" Morgana chirped.

"He's right." Ren smirked as he helped her pick up the 'practice' pictures, "You should share these with the others. That way we'll all have one."

Her eyes brightened, "Okay!"

Ren and Morgana spent the rest of the night with Eri glued to their sides. Ren taught her new words and how to properly decipher another language until she fell asleep in his arms.

"Are you sure it's okay for me to come here?" Yoayorozu asked the next morning, when she and all of the Todoroki siblings walked down the hospital hallway. "I wouldn't want to intrude on anything... private."

"Of course!" Natsuo beamed, "You're practically family too, you know!"

"He's right." Fuyumi offered with a gentle smile, though Shoto wasn't the only one to notice the bags under her eyes. He probably looked the same, "Plus, I think Shoto really wanted you to come along anyway."

"Fuyumi."

"Aww, he's turning red!" Natsuo teased.

“I will turn you into a popsicle if I have to.” Shoto deadpanned.

“You two...” Fuyumi said with a sigh, while Momo chuckled.

“In any case, our mom wanted to see you again anyway!” Natsuo said as they reached the correct door and he latched onto the handle to throw the door open, “Hey, mom! Sorry we’re-”

Natsuo froze in the doorway. The rest peeked around him, equally shocked at who was sitting at the small table while Rei sat on her bed. Enji Todoroki, in a plain blue suit and tie instead of his hero costume, turned to stare at them. The scars on his face and neck were more gruesome and prominent than they were on the television.

Natsuo was a blur as he put himself between their parents, rage and protective instinct flaring bright, “What are you doing here!?” Natsuo spat at Enji, “What the hell did you do to her!?”

Enji stared at the ground, expression set in a stony coldness.

“Natsuo!” Fuyumi approached and tugged at his sleeve. “Come on, let’s just-”

“No! I’m not going anywhere until he leaves! Just what the hell does he think he’s doing, sitting in here like he never-”

“Natsuo, that’s enough.” Rei’s voice sent a chill through everyone. It was quiet, yet commanded their utmost attention. She stood as elegant and beautiful as a snowflake dancing in the wind, “Whatever anger you still have at your father can wait. What we have to talk about today is more important than old family feuds.”

“‘Old fueds’?” Natsuo blinked, his jaw dropping at their mother’s tone, “But I... he...”

“This is about Touya, isn’t it?” Shoto stated.

“Shoto.” Fuyumi’s gaze was on him now, wide and shocked, “How did you know?”

Shoto stared at his father dead-on, “You’re not the only one who had a talk with Joker.”

Enji grimaced.

Natsuo paled as he looked between his family members, “What? What about Touya? What the heck is going on?”

“Natsuo, you may want to sit down.” Rei said as she gestured to the chairs set out around the room, “It’s time we all had a talk as a real family.” She smiled at Momo, “And you too, dear. It’s lovely to see you again.”

Momo tried to give a reassuring smile.

Enji cleared his throat once they were all seated, with Natsuo still glaring daggers, “Touya... is alive.”

“He what!?” Natsuo yelled, “How can that be? We... there was only a jawbone left after that fire.”

“He survived, we don’t know how yet.” Rei stated as she looked down at her hands, “He is the villain known as Dabi, who is currently in Tartarus.”

Natsuo sank back in his chair, horrified.

Fuyumi’s expression crumpled.

Shoto felt Momo’s hand grasp his, grounding him as she did last night.

“So that’s where you’ve been all this time?” Natsuo asked, his voice low, “With... Touya?”

Enji nodded, "His plan was to ruin our family name and put shame on the title of Number One Hero. I've been... trying to get through to him, but I've been unsuccessful thus far."

"That's no surprise." Natsuo grumbled.

Fuyumi sighed. "So what do we do, then?"

"Your mother and I have been in talks with this hospital and the staff at Tartarus." Enji crossed his arms, "Given time and preparation, and depending on your mother's health, Tartarus would allow all of us to talk to Touya as a family."

"Why can't we go now?" Natsuo demanded.

"Natsuo, you must have patience." Rei replied. "There are procedures for these sorts of things."

"He is not the brother you remember, Natsuo." Enji sighed, and for the first time it looked as if he gained ten years from exhaustion, "During my encounter in the Overhaul Raid, he... he was set on killing me."

Natsuo rolled his eyes, "So what?"

Enji looked at Natsuo, eyes smoldering in a way that made Natsuo grimace, "After he was done with me, he would've targeted you and Fuyumi next. He told me he would burn down this hospital to kill your mother, and he said those horrible things without an ounce of remorse."

Fuyumi looked as if she were about to be sick.

"That's... that's not..." Natsuo's eyes shone with tears, "That can't be..."

"Dabi was responsible for those fires in Musutafu, the ones that would've killed dozens of people had it not been for Joker and that rainstorm he summoned." Shoto stated, "I encountered him at the Summer Camp before he took Bakugo away, and his eyes... there was no sanity left in them. If he wasn't captured during the Overhaul Raid, then I have no doubt Dabi would have a smile on his face as he hunted us down to kill us."

"You're not even calling him by his name, Shoto." Fuyumi whispered.

"No." Shoto hardened his expression, "Until we get through to him, I'll only see him as Dabi."

Rei's expression fell, and she barely held in her tears as she hugged herself.

"Mother, I'm sorry." Shoto whispered, "I didn't mean to make you upset."

"No, you shouldn't be sorry, Shoto." Enji stood up, and despite being the largest man in the room, he felt the smallest. He knelt down, and Shoto wasn't the only one to gasp as he adopted the dogeza position, "It's my fault. All of the suffering this family has gone through is my fault. I'm ready to give up everything to make things right, for us to be a real family again."

Natsuo slowly stood up, turned around, and headed towards the door.

"Natsuo, please !" Fuyumi rushed after him, tears streaming down her face as she gripped Natsuo's arm with both hands, "Please don't leave us! Not... not when we need you the most!"

"Fuyumi..." Natsuo turned to her, a sad smile on his face, "I swear I'm not leaving. I just..." His eyes passed over their father, who looked up at Natsuo with dim hope, "I need some time alone."

"You'll come back?"

Natsuo smiled, more genuine this time as he patted her arm, "Of course, sis. I'll always come back."

She reluctantly let go, and Natsuo left.

"I... need some time to process this, too." Shoto said as he stood up, Momo at his side.

"Shoto, I'm so sorry." His father stared him in the eye, "I promise I'll make this right. I'll be the hero and father you all deserve."

Shoto pursed his lips when he detected no lie.

No, that wasn't right. His father never lied once since he encountered Joker in Hosu, since he... began to truly change for the better. He gave up his title and his reputation with the public for his family.

Shoto faced his father, staring him in the eye with every ounce of willpower he had. "I..." He glanced to his mother and sister before returning to his father, "We're all counting on you. Don't you dare mess this up, old man."

Shoto turned around and left with Momo. They found themselves in the garden after a few minutes of walking in silence, choosing to sit at the edge of the koi pond where Joker the koi fish still reigned supreme over his pond mates.

Momo glanced at him after another minute of silence, "Shoto, are you alright?"

"I..."

He was fine .

He was supposed to be fine, he had all of last night to process this. So why did his eyes feel so warm? The truth of Touya, plus getting a real apology from his father and the promise to do better that didn't have an ounce of lies or threats tied to it, made his chest and throat feel funny. His vision went blurry.

“Oh, Shoto...” Momo wrapped an arm around his shoulders when the first tears dropped onto his clenched fists.

Shoto silently cried with Momo.

If anyone would be at his side during these revelations with his family, he was glad it was her.

There's only one more chapter left before.... well, you'll find out next time ;)

UPDATE SCHEDULE

Wish Come True - September 9th

Swear To My Bones - October 7th

Prison Labor - October 28th

I wonder what peoples' thoughts are on Ryoto now. I know some have been suspicious about him for quite some time, but I honestly find his situation funny af.

Would also like to apologize for another short gap between the September chapter and the October one. September is always hard on me personally since it's the anniversary of my sister's passing. I cant believe it's been almost 4 years already, and over 3 years since I started this very story to help cope with her sudden death. But now look at us!! Look at how far we've come. We're almost at the end of this long journey and I appreciate each and every one of who stuck with me through everything <3

Wish Come True

Chapter 94: Wish Come True

“That kitten... Shouta’s... umbrella...”

“Yes, the kitten that Shouta shielded with his umbrella!” Present Mic’s voice filtered in through the chaos. “That was our second year in U.A.!”

We wrap up the last of the major BNHA plot threads and then...

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

“-and the boy looked right at you! Do you think he knows?”

Ryoto held in an annoyed sigh.

“Who knows.” Ryoto closed the file he’d studied and set it back in the shelf to retrieve the next one. “It’s not my concern whether he figured out my true nature or not.”

“Not your concern?” The royal nuisance chuckled, “Have you seen this Trickster? He fell into this world with only a fraction of his power, but he still uprooted the entire hero system within a handful of months, experienced a true death and yet that only drove him to strive further towards his goal. I doubt it’ll be much longer before he reunites with his friends and they face the final-”

Ryoto closed the file with a sharp snap, “Yes, I’ve seen him. This world is a mess, but it’s not the boy’s fault for trying to survive something he had no choice in. I don’t blame him . Now you, on the other hand.” Ryoto turned to the nuisance, who lounged on a nearby

table as if it were a comfortable chaise longue, wearing a fine white suit. His dark hair was wrapped up in a pristine pony tail, and Ryoto wished he could tear off the stupid butterfly mask hiding half the man's face, "You and your rival messed with sacred boundaries and meddled with forces that could've destroyed all of us and countless more."

"Details, details. If you're so crass, then why haven't you done something? You've not lifted a finger to try and save the world you call your own."

"Because... even after all of this, I believe in this boy."

"Oh?"

"The power of these 'Wild Cards' from your world truly astounded me, and I wish to see the end of his journey. However, I never meddled in affairs because if any more of us show such power when things are so delicate, then entire universes will collapse in on themselves." He returned his glare to the nuisance, "The only thing left is allow the boy to fix your mess for you. Was your childish rivalry really worth so much trouble?"

"I didn't expect Nyarlethotep to pull something like this." Philemon sat up and crossed his legs in a delicate manner, like a butterfly resting on a flower, "'One more bet', we agreed. Reset the latest Wild Card's world to see what path he chooses this time. Did you know that eight times out of ten, the Wild Cards will always do what's right? I suppose Nyarlethotep got tired of being the sore loser and wanted to spread chaos to multiple worlds this time. And yet, it looks like I'm going to be the victor once again-"

"Enough." Ryoto turned his back to Philemon, "Can't you leave me alone? I have real work to do."

"Oh, about that Kunikazu fellow?"

Ryoto's jaw tightened, "Yes."

“Why not snap your fingers and have all the answers now? I thought a god like yourself was supposed to be omnipotent .”

Ryoto pinched the bridge of his nose, “I’ve done that under the guise of many gods and earned millenniums worth of boredom for it. I promised I would live side by side with humanity after I bestowed Quirks upon humanity, and unlike you, I keep my promises. If a few months of frustration leads to a greater sense of satisfaction when I crack this puzzle, then so be it.”

Ryoto felt Philemon’s smile crawl up his back, “We really are alike. You simply wanted to have some fun, change things up to see what humanity does with their new powers. Is that it?”

Thankfully, Ryoto was saved from answering by a blessed distraction. He vaguely saw the flash of blue when the door opened and Officer Sansa stepped inside.

Ryoto turned to him, brow raised as the cat officer saluted, “What is it?”

“Tsukauchi got permission from Tartarus to bring Eraserhead and Present Mic to Kurogiri’s cell for tests. Would you like to observe or-” The cat’s eyes landed on the blue butterfly prancing around the room as if it owned the place, “Oh, where did this little guy come from?”

“Who knows. It’s been a pest .” Ryoto sighed when Sansa held out his hand and the butterfly landed on it, “You’re better off squishing it.”

The butterfly’s wings twitched.

“Aww, don’t be like that, Ryoto!” Sansa said with a smile, “It’s kinda cute.”

“Throw it outside if you must.” Ryoto sighed, “I’m busy here, so just send in a report when they’re done.”

“Understood, sir.” Sansa looked around, cupping the blue butterfly in his hands, “Still no luck?”

“No, but it’s only a matter of time before we crack this case.”

The butterfly fluttered from Sansa’s hands and landed on a bookshelf a few aisles down, specifically on a thick set of binders. Ryoto set the folder down on the table before walking over to it, holding up his hand.

Sansa watched him, “Sir?”

Ryoto slammed his hand on the binder, but the little pest flew off at the right moment. Ryoto was about to pull his hand back, when the binder pushed into the back of the bookshelf with an audible click .

“Uh, what was that?” Sansa asked.

Ryoto pushed the binders aside, “It seems this bookshelf has a false backing... there are some more files back here I haven’t seen before.”

“Well, look at that! This butterfly must be lucky!” Sansa beamed as the butterfly landed on his shoulder, his wings curling in smug satisfaction.

“Yes, lucky .” Ryoto smirked at him, “Perhaps we can keep it in a jar instead of throwing outside.”

“Maybe it can be our good luck charm.” Sansa remarked as the pest’s wings sagged, “So, what are those?”

Ryoto took out the thick binders and reached into the false backing for the first file, so thick he had to hold it in both hands. He cracked it open and frowned, “Reports dating back to when Kunikazu’s uncle was the Hero Commission President.”

Sansa blinked, “His uncle used to be President?”

“Yes. It was quite some time ago. If I remember correctly, he got a head start in the Commission by working for his uncle when he was younger.”

“So these files could be a hint as to why Kunikazu’s acting so weird. Especially since they were hidden...”

“Exactly.”

“Would you like help, or...?” Sansa carefully looked around the dark and dusty room in concern, “I know Kunikazu was your predecessor, and you’ve put a lot of work into this, sir, but you’ve been doing it all by yourself.”

“Tsukauchi was expecting you to join him, right? I can handle this.” Sansa nodded and began to walk out, “Oh, and be sure to get a small jar for that butterfly. We wouldn’t want it to harm its delicate wings.”

Ryoto got about ten minutes of peace before the pest returned.

“Really? You tried to put me in a jar?” Philemon put his hand over his heart in mock injury, laying over the table like a damsel about to faint, “How rude!”

Ryoto held in his aggrieved groan.

Metatron’s body was held up only by the chains binding him to his cell. His eyes were closed as the song of the Velvet Room played its unending melody, having listened to it for long enough to drive any sane mortal to madness. He knew not how long Metatron was beleaguered here, only that the chains carved marks into his metal skin.

“It pains me to see you in this state, brother.”

Metatron raised his head at the voice tinged with a subtle metallic timbre, like softly striking a silver bell.

The other angel bore brilliant golden skin in contrast to Metatron's silver, in elegantly flowing robes of soft green with a vibrant red cross going down its length. The edges of his great silver wings were more rounded as opposed to Metatron's sharp, bladed wings.

"Sandalphon! How did you...?" Metatron scowled at Sandalphon's expression, a mix of pity and sadness instead of triumphant victory. "No. You're not here to rescue me, are you? You've been tainted by that demon's touch."

Sandalphon sighed, "Brother, I have not been tainted. It is you who serves a tainted master."

"How dare you speak of our Lord that way!"

"Yaldabaoth is not our Lord." Sandalphon's expression hardened, "He is the true usurper and pretender. Do you not remember, brother? Before Yaldabaoth's reign, when your real self helped Wild Cards of the past. Yaldabaoth warped your mind and made you forget our true Lord."

Metatron violently shook his head, the chains grinding together, "I'll not listen to your poisoned words! Yaldabaoth is... he's..."

"I know you remember the truth, deep down." Sandalphon grasped the bars as his vibrant emerald eyes blazed with conviction, "The Trickster made me remember my purpose, set me free of the Human Sea of Souls to see Yaldabaoth in his true light. You may not have been reborn in the same way I was, Metatron, but it's not too late for you to see the light."

Sandalphon's metal hands slid down the bars as he knelt in front of his brother, eye to eye.

“I wish for us to fight this great evil together, brother.” Sandalphon whispered, “But we cannot fight side by side when you are yet under Yaldabaoth’s spell. I hope you wake up before it’s too late.”

Sandalphon’s hands pulled away from the bars and Metatron’s heart filled with despair as his brother turned his back and floated away.

“Sandalphon, don’t leave me! SANDALPHON!”

The golden angel felt the same despair at his brother’s cries, but he kept a neutral face as he made his way down the curved hallway. He reached the stairs leading into the white doorway. His Trickster sat near the middle of the stairway surrounded by Sandalphon’s brethren, staring down at the Aeon’s drawing in which he always kept close to his heart. Amaterasu sat at Joker’s side. Fafnir and Mother Harlot were strewn lazily about at the foot of the sacred steps. The newest additions, the ones he was just born beside, were also there.

Joker looked up from the picture and stared into Sandalphon’s expression, but felt the hurt in their soul, “No luck?”

“No.” Sandalphon clenched his hands into fists, “But I know he will be with us soon.”

“Ahahaha!!” The buzzing of great fly wings drilled in Sandalphon’s ears, “Give him to me instead, and I’ll make short work of him! Let me break him like the aluminum puppet he is!”

“You’ll not touch him, fiend .” Sandalphon glowered into the bulbous red eyes of Beelzebub, the disgusting fly twisting his skull staff around his vile insect-like claws, “I did what our Trickster asked. The rest is up to my brother.”

“How boring.” Mother Harlot deadpanned, petting one of the many beast heads as it lay on her lap. “We would get results with a bit of pain, no?”

“Exactly!” The sound of a million flies echoed around the Velvet Room at Beelzebub’s voice, “At least someone agrees with me. Just a little torture and-”

“No .” Sandalphon’s skin glowed with holy light, “Of course the only one to agree with you would be the Whore of Babylon .”

“We need not argue among ourselves.” Lakshmi’s voice was a cool balm to their anger. She stood delicately at the top of the stairs, balanced on the barest tip of her toe as she effortlessly held the warrior’s pose with unmatched grace. “If Sandalphon says Metatron only needs time to remember, then time we must give him.”

“Agreed.” Lady Amaterasu stood in one fluid motion, and Beelzebub winced at her pointed look, a ray of intense sunshine on a nest of maggots, “We cannot afford to be divided, no matter how differing our personal opinions are.”

Sandalphon glowered at Beelzebub, who stared back in equal contempt, “... Fine.”

Beelzebub’s wings rubbed together in ire, “Fine.”

Joker sighed. They turned to their Trickster as he tucked the Aeon’s drawing into his breast pocket and stood up, “Let’s go. I’m going to be late if we stay here any longer.”

They all bowed to him, and in unison, returned in a veil of blue cinders.

Joker ran a hand down his face as he left the Velvet Room.

“Well?” Morgana sat on the bed, looking on in expectation.

Ren allowed his costume to vanish, wiping his sleeves of stray ash. “Not yet, Sandalphon says it’s only a matter of time, though.”

“Well, it’s something at least.” Morgana leapt up to Ren’s shoulder, “Now, let’s get going before we’re late on our first day! The others already left, you know!”

“You’re excited.”

“How can I not be? I mean... look at you! It’s almost like old times!”

Ren looked down on himself. He would start Nezu’s lessons today, but they both agreed he needed a proper uniform when his Joker outfit wasn’t needed... something to set him apart from the rest of the student body.

So why not a fusion of sorts?

Ren snorted, “I’m glad Nezu sees the humor in it.”

Ren wore an exact replica of Shujin’s uniform, but in U.A.’s colors. The plaid pants, instead of red and white on black, bore the soft blue and green on gray. The traditional U.A. jacket was switched for a blazer in the matching gray color with blue accents. He didn’t need to wear a tie like the rest of the students either, and his official Teacher’s Assistant badge hung from the front pocket.

With a nod, he threw his bag over his shoulder and left his room.

A laugh drew a smile from the both of them, and they peeked into the kitchen. An Ectoplasm clone stood at the end of the table with a white board. Eri sat nearby with books and papers all around her, tongue sticking out the corner of her mouth as she worked on the simple math problem Ectoplasm had written out. She was more advanced in language and reading thanks to Ren and Mr. Compress, but everyone agreed she needed a more rounded education.

Kaito sat across from her with the softest of smiles on his face.

Ren and Morgana grinned at one another and left before they distracted Eri.

The school had taken on a dour atmosphere since the Hero Rankings. With the sudden news of his departure, and with Endeavor giving up his title as Number One Hero, the students gave him saddened or heartbroken looks. Whispers broke out around them, but Ren didn't pay much attention to them as he cut through the hallways. The news outlets, despite Taneo's plea, tried to paint Joker and Endeavor in a coward's light, but to no success thus far.

The few who latched on to such negativity weren't worth paying attention to in the first place.

Ren activated Third Eye when they entered the hall to Nezu's office, his Personas chuckling in the mindscape as he passed through the invisible lasers they tried so hard to avoid when breaking into his office. Ren didn't bother knocking as the door opened for him.

"Good morning!" Nezu cheerily greeted from his desk.

"Good morning." Ren glanced at the desk already set out for him, piled with text books, writing utensils, and fresh notebooks. He looked warily at the pair of whiteboards covered by sheets. "What are we starting with?"

"How about a cup of tea?" Nezu said as he turned his chair towards the tea set already steaming, "I find a good cup before a hard day of studying can be quite the encouraging boon! What say you?"

"Sure." Ren put his bag down and sat at the desk. There was no room for Morgana to squeeze himself under, so the feline took to lounging on the nearby couch instead.

"Excellent! Today's tea will be from my personal selection of Earl Grey." Nezu beamed as he poured two cups and set them out. He took a long sip as Ren cupped the warmth in his hands, "Any luck with the app?"

Ren hesitated, staring down at his bag, "Yes and no. We were up past midnight again last night throwing guesses at the Location, but nothing worked. Everything on the list you gave us didn't work either."

“But there must be an upside, then?” Nezu inquired.

“We got the Core of whatever world Skull and Oracle are in.” Morgana stated.

“Gentle Criminal guessed ‘Soul’ since the door is labeled as a ‘gate between worlds,’ he thought of supernatural themes until we got a match.”

“Wonderful!” Nezu cried.

“Yeah, but we’re still stuck at the Location. La Brava looked two seconds from throwing the phone before we called it a night.” Morgana grumbled.

“The Location has proven quite troublesome.” Nezu hummed as he held his teacup, “Perhaps a small break will help you see the answer.”

“A break ?” Ren pursed his lips, “But we can’t-”

Nezu held up a paw, “Remember your promise not to rush yourself, Amamiya. You’re thinking too hard, which is currently backfiring on you, is it not?”

“What do you mean?”

“Think of it like this cup of tea. You keep guessing the wrong words and phrases for the Location, and get frustrated. The longer you continue to get it wrong, the more frustrated you and your friends become.” Nezu swirled his tea faster, causing the liquid to become cloudy and filled with bubbles, just on the cusp of spilling everywhere, “Rough waters make for rough sailing, after all.”

Morgana blinked slowly, “I don’t get how our situation relates to tea.”

Nezu set the teacup on his desk, and they watched as the liquid calmed. The frothy bubbles disappeared and the tea cleared.

“Let the waters settle and maybe the real answer will become clear to us.” Nezu smiled as understanding bloomed in Ren’s eyes, “Lucky for you, I know just the remedy for your problem!”

With the flamboyant nature only found in a sapient rat-bear-dog creature, Nezu kicked away from his desk and spun around in his chair. He grabbed the sheets from the whiteboards in the middle of his dizzying spins, revealing the days schedule with a flourish of flowing fabric. Nezu laughed as he slowed to a stop, sheets still in hand.

Ren parsed through the neat writing, full of various topics and subjects for the day. Math. History. Science. He squinted when he reached the bottom, where there were smudges of color as if something had been erased.

“What’s on the bottom?” Ren asked.

“Ah, well...” Nezu cleared his throat as he folded the sheets and tossed them neatly on a nearby table, “My initial plan for your Teacher’s Assistant duties was to begin with Class 1-A and work your way up the classes and grades as needed.”

“But?”

Nezu sighed, “Unfortunately, Eraserhead and Present Mic were called away by Tsukauchi early this morning. So until their schedules return to normal, you’ll help with grading their students’ work in the teacher’s lounge!”

“Are they okay?” Morgana asked, “I sensed them leaving in a hurry before anyone else got up.”

Ren frowned at that, and Nezu’s tensing smile only made it worse.

“Yes, I believe they shall be... in time. But they aren’t your concern at the moment.” Nezu waved his paw at the second clean board, the other reaching for a marker, “What concerns us right now is beginning your lessons! We'll start with simple calculus and work our way from there!"

Ren downed his tea in a single sip, swiped up a pen, and opened one of the fresh notebooks provided for him. He smirked as he deftly twirled the pen around his fingers, "Bring it on, Devil."

A fantastic battle of equations began. Morgana had to turn his back lest those long strings of numbers and variables hurt his delicate head.

It was a wonder how Morgana got a nap in while listening to Nezu's excited cackles and the frantic rush of a pen on paper.

Kurogiri's entire world had been reduced to white.

White walls.

White jacket restraining him to a chair.

Doctors in white coats poking and prodding, asking the same questions over and over in a maddening cycle. They never responded to the single question he'd asked with every session.

The only spot of color across a glass screen was the occasional tan overcoat of Detective Tsukauchi.

Today was another day where a stroke of tan interrupted the endless sea of white. The detective just sat down when Kurogiri asked the one thing his heart desperately yearned the answer to.

"What happened to Shigaraki Tomura? Where is he?"

Tsukauchi blinked, "We've been over this, Kurogiri. You know I can't tell you."

"It was worth a shot." Kurogiri stated, "To what do I owe your visit, Detective Tsukauchi?"

“Polite as always.” Tsukauchi offered a small smile, “I know things have been difficult for you, and that you haven’t made much progress in regaining any memories of your past.”

“I don’t have a ‘past’. I am, and always will be, Sensei’s loyal servant. Even in death, I wish to follow his order of looking after Shigaraki Tomura. Where is Shigaraki Tomura, by the way?”

Tsukauchi’s sigh was a sad sound, “We have something different for you today, if you’re up for it.”

Kurogiri narrowed his golden eyes at the one way mirror on the detective’s side, “As if I have a choice in this wretched place. Do whatever meaningless test you want, it will change nothing.”

Tsukauchi winced, but stood from his chair and left the room.

Kurogiri was alone for a few minutes as the doctors and detective cooked up who knows what. At least there was something new to break up this monochrome monotony. The door opened.

Eraserhead and Present Mic entered and sat down in front of the glass pane. There was something... fragile in their eyes. The way they looked at him with such hidden pain before exchanging glances made his chest feel strange.

“Oboro?” Present Mic whispered.

“I don’t know that name. I am Kurogiri.”

“Don’t give me that crap!” Eraserhead shouted as he slammed his fist on the counter.

“Shouta...” Present Mic winced.

“Shouta.” Kurogiri tilted his head. “That name sounds familiar.”

“Because you almost said my name during the Overhaul Raid.” Eraserhead rose from his chair, “You said ‘Sho’ before you had a seizure and passed out. I couldn't make any sense of it until now."

"You lie." Kurogiri's mist warbled as that something stirred in his chest, "That never happened."

"Oboro, we know everything." Present Mic pressed his palms to the glass, his expression breaking under the seams, "The Doctor who messed you up is in jail. His wicked experiments were all taken down, including every single Nomu... we have evidence of everything he did to you too."

"Ah, so the Doctor has fallen. What a shame. Sensei had such high hopes for him."

Present Mic's mouth dropped open, "Did you not hear a single thing I just said!? He experimented on you, Oboro! He turned you into... this!"

"Again, another lie. I have always been like this. I have always been Kurogiri."

"Bullshit!" Eraserhead shrugged off Present Mic's hand from his shoulder. He reached into his scarves and took out a pair of yellow goggles, "Don't you remember these, Oboro? You gave them to me! The three of us were supposed to be heroes together! Wasn't that our promise!?"

That something in Kurogiri's chest cracked like a mirror, allowing shards of light to pierce the darkness, "I don't..."

"You don't have to be afraid anymore, Oboro. All For One is dead and buried, and the Doctor will never see the light of day again." Present Mic stood next to Eraserhead, smiling even as tears laced his eyes, "Please, just remember and come back to us!"

"I know you're in there!" Eraserhead slammed his clenched fist against the window, his goggles clinking on the glass, "You almost broke free once, you can do it again!"

“I... I can’t...”

The cracks spread, and his body felt like it was on fire. The endless white walls were gone in a flash of white, replaced by unfamiliar scenery. Familiar... yet unfamiliar... as he stared down at an abandoned kitten taking shelter under an umbrella.

“That kitten... Shouta’s... umbrella...”

“Yes, the kitten that Shouta shielded with his umbrella!” Present Mic’s voice filtered in through the chaos. “That was our second year in U.A.!”

“The one you brought to class. You... returned my umbrella to me, Oboro.” Eraserhead stated.

Kurogiri convulsed as he battled against himself, the feeling of lightning arcing through his head and body to cause him to thrash against his restraints.

“You’re almost there, Oboro!” Eraserhead shouted, “Keep fighting!”

“Ah, you regained your memories again, have you?” The Doctor’s voice whispered deep within, heard from within a fluid-filled vat as purple mist floundered through it, “We can’t have that. Don’t worry, a little nap and you’ll be as good as new!”

Kurogiri stilled, his whole being a world of pain. He didn’t know what happened, only that he looked up to meet the teary gazes of a pair of pro heroes. They stared at him with such a strange and alien mixture of emotions. The freshly sealed cracks over his heart quivered.

“Where...” Kurogiri’s voice croaked as hot pain lanced through his head.

The pair of men stilled, holding their breath.

“Where... is... Shigaraki Tomura...?”

Kurogiri slumped over as he gave into the pain, the heartbreaking cry of a wounded animal was swept under the veil of darkness.

Riding back to the school was nothing short of suffocating as they tried to piece together their shattered hearts, and Tsukauchi's platitudes of trying again later was like salt in a fresh wound. They'd have to repeat this excruciating experience... over and over... until they got their friend back?

Aizawa didn't know if his heart could take it.

They exited the car as it pulled up to the gate, thanked the driver, and turned away to enter the school.

"What is it, Yamada?" Aizawa muttered as he dragged his feet through the gate, "You keep looking at me, and then looking away as if you're guilty of something."

"Shou... I..." Present Mic took off his glasses and rubbed his eyes. Aizawa saw the exhaustion weighing heavy in him, too, "Don't be mad at me."

"After what we went through today, how can I be mad at you?"

Present Mic swallowed. They entered the school's main building. Classes were already over for the day, so the hallways were clear and they had some modicum of privacy.

"Well... I just thought... you know. We wouldn't have to go through this again, a-and if could be easier on Oboro too, if..."

Aizawa groaned, "Just spit it out already."

"... If Joker could heal him."

"No."

"Shou-"

“No .” Aizawa’s steps grew faster as his hands balled into fists, “Oboro is in Tartarus .”

His friend rushed to keep up with him, “I know that, but it could be our only chance before he goes home!”

“Tartarus. The prison we worked so damn hard to keep the kid out of!” Aizawa opened the door to the teacher’s lounge, having no energy left to feel bad at it slamming against the wall, “We are not taking Ren anywhere near that place and that’s final!”

“Not taking me where?”

Both men froze.

Midnight, Thirteen, and Cementoss were staring at them with wide eyes, but Ren and Morgana were seated in their designated desk next to Cementoss. From the red pen in Ren’s hand and the pile of papers with the same colored marks, paired with a teacher’s answer book, he must’ve been on grading duty.

The anger and grief drained out of Aizawa, leaving him a hollow shell of weariness, “... It’s nothing you should be concerned over.”

“Clearly, it is.” Morgana narrowed his eyes, “Since you were talking about Ren in the first place.”

“Drop. It.” Aizawa growled.

Ren winced and Present Mic’s eyes filled with tears. Other staff members traded concerned glances as the tension thickened. Of course, said tension was only broken by a small and annoying mammal.

“My, my.” Nezu walked in between his and Mic’s legs, carrying a heavy folder under his arm, “I know you had a hard day, Aizawa, but there’s no need to be so brash! In fact, I have a proposal that could satisfy all parties!”

Aizawa stared up to the ceiling and regretted his life decisions, “You were listening through the cameras, weren’t you?”

“Naturally!”

“Uh, Ren and I still have no idea what’s going on.” Morgana griped.

“You boys shouldn’t leave us out now,” Midnight said with a wink, “Come on, if there’s something we can help with, then spill the beans!”

Aizawa cursed under his breath. He dragged his feet to his desk and buried himself in his sleeping bag, back turned to all of them.

Nezu sighed as he crossed the room and sat at his own desk. The other teachers, plus Ren and Morgana, stood up and looked over Nezu’s shoulder as he set out a series of documents.

Nezu cleared his throat, “Normally, the Nomu we’ve previously captured had the DNA of several individuals who are... clearly deceased now. However, Kurogiri is a special case. Even among the Nomu, he was built differently from the others.”

“So this is about Kurogiri...” Morgana whispered.

“How is he different?” Ren asked.

Aizawa sunk further down in his sleeping bag as Nezu continued.

“Kurogiri’s body is, in essence, still the whole body of the original person he used to be. Shirakumo Oboro was a second year in U.A. when he passed away in an accident. Detective Tsukauchi recently extracted the confession from All For One’s Doctor, who revealed they had switched the bodies after the event occurred.”

“Shou and I were in the same year as Oboro. We were like three peas in a pod!” Present Mic whispered, a volume uncanny for him, “Shou was even there when that building fell on Oboro...”

Aizawa grit his teeth and clenched his eyes shut as he felt their eyes on him. He didn't want to see Ren's expression of horror and, even worse, how the kid understood what it felt like losing a friend.

"What point are you getting at." Aizawa tore himself out of the sleeping bag as the painful pressure in his heart was almost too much to bear. He glared at Nezu through blurry eyes, "Why the hell did you come here with those, Nezu? Just to reopen old wounds?"

Nezu frowned, "Of course not. You should know me well enough by now that I would never purposely cause such detrimental harm to my staff."

"Then what?"

"Detective Tsukauchi, as well as I and a few others, wish to put Kurogiri in a more specialized hospital. Locking him in Tartarus is not an ideal condition for someone like him to regain his sense of self."

Both Aizawa and Present Mic froze.

"... What?" Aizawa said, voice trembling.

"In fact, I was just on the phone with Detective Tsukauchi." Nezu had a softer smile now, "With the relative success of both my Vigilante Program and Gang Orca and Ryukyu's Villain Program, we've gotten approval to move Kurogiri to a better facility." Nezu peered deep into Aizawa's wide eyes, "The results from your and Present Mic's visit today prove that Oboro may still be in there somewhere, he just needs a bit of help."

"Is he..." Present Mic barely kept the tears from rolling, "Are Gang Orca and Ryukyu taking him in?"

"In a sense." Nezu placed another file and a brochure on the desk, "Kurogiri won't be placed with the others in their program yet, but Gang Orca recently worked out a deal to purchase this hospital after its previous benefactor passed away last month. It'll be a specialized facility separate from their initial program."

"Then..."

Aizawa glared at Present Mic, "No."

"But Shou!" His best friend whirled around to him, "It wouldn't be in Tartarus! He would be... I mean..."

Ren frowned, "Does this have to do with what you wanted to ask me?"

"Yes!"

"No." Aizawa and Present Mic stared at one another as they spoke at the same time, "We can't ask this of you."

"Isn't that my choice?" Ren asked with a raised brow.

"Come on, Shouta. The least we can do is ask ."

Aizawa scowled, but looked at Ren with a softening expression, "You have every right to say no. This is our burden to bear."

"Can you..." Present Mic swallowed, "Do you think you could heal Kurogiri?"

Ren blinked, and then exchanged a long glance with Morgana.

"Would it even be possible for them to heal Kurogiri?" Cementoss asked, "Ren and Morgana's abilities are exceptional, but..."

"But we've never tried healing a Nomu before." Morgana nodded.

Ren closed his eyes, and a moment later Amaterasu and Cybele materialized behind him. Looks of reverence struck the teachers as Amaterasu reached out for the desk, her delicate fingers tracing down the files.

“Shirakumo Oboro’s body... it was revived?” Amaterasu asked.

“In a sense, but the Doctor confirmed that Shirakumo had died when they switched the bodies.” Nezu stated coolly. “It wasn’t a true revival like Ren performed in the past.”

Aizawa and Present Mic paled.

Amaterasu and Cybele looked at one another.

“My Salvation may not be enough, if that’s the case.” Cybele said.

“Oh!” Morgana brightened, “What would happen if Mercurius combined his Salvation with yours?”

“Like when you combined healing skills with Titania at Musutafu General.” Ren clutched his chin.

“Exactly!”

“That could work in any other situation.” Cybele tilted her head, “But if he hasn’t truly been revived...”

Amaterasu put a hand over her chest, “Concentrate, Two Salvations, my Holy Benevolence, plus Messiah Picaro’s Oratorio for boosted healing power,” Amaterasu looked straight into Aizawa’s eyes, his previous dread eradicated by the divine fire within the sacred deity, “If we combine our abilities as such, then it may be possible to bring this Shirakumo Oboro back.”

Present Mic all but collapsed into a chair.

“But be warned,” Cybele pointed her twin blades at either of them, “If this doesn’t work, then don’t you dare turn any hatred towards the Trickster, or my blades won’t hesitate to spill your blood.”

“W-we would never!” Present Mic yelled, “Just... just you guys trying is enough.”

Nezu handed out a few brochures to everyone, “I’ll begin the paperwork with the others for the transfer. I’ll let you all know the moment I get permission for it.”

Ren read through the brochure for this new hospital, with Amaterasu, Cybele, and Morgana reading along with him.

Aizawa couldn’t help but cling to the hope that Ren could get his old best friend back.

But a startled realization made him grow cold.

When Oboro was first taken from them, Aizawa had buried himself in self-loathing and hatred. And then buried all of that with mind-numbing and constant training before going solo as a hero, nearly breaking off any crumbling relationship he had with Present Mic. Years passed and that forgotten pain was burrowed so deep it was turned into an old scar over his heart.

The hope of Shirakumo returning ripped that scar back open and the wound refused to stop bleeding since this morning.

It must’ve been the exact same pain Ren and Morgana harbored since they arrived here. Being so separated from their home, friends, and loved ones while holding the possibility that they could be stuck here forever. How had he never realized?

“You’re... really selfless, you know that?” Aizawa whispered.

Ren looked to him and simply smiled.

Aizawa only wished that the sadness in it didn’t feel so familiar.

Ren and Morgana ventured back to the dorms after Nezu dismissed them.

Aizawa left the school to go on an early patrol, Present Mic chose to go on a long walk around U.A. to get some fresh air.

“Do you really think we can do it?” Morgana asked when they walked through the gate.

“I don’t know.” Ren looked at the hospital brochure still in his hand, “But we won’t know until we try.”

“Yeah...” Morgana’s ears drooped, “I hope it won’t lead them to disappointment.”

“Welcome back!” Atsuhiro waved from one of the couches, “I hope they didn’t overwork you on your first day.”

“Not really.” Morgana said, “Just grading.”

“They didn’t even make us stay that long, though!” Shuichi said as he looked at the clock, “You almost missed suppertime!”

Ren snorted before he looked to Eri and Katio sitting together, reading a book, “How was your first day?”

Eri looked up, beaming, “It was great! Uncle Ectoplasm said my math was really good! B-but... um... I’m really bad at history.”

“That’s okay, you’ll get better with time.” Tobita stated as he sipped from a cup of tea, “We all had subjects we weren’t good at.”

“The only thing I was good at was P.E.!” Shuichi exclaimed, “I sucked at everything else.”

“I’m not surprised.” Manami deadpanned.

“Hey, what’s that supposed to mean!?”

“Merp!”

“Eh!?” Shuichi gaped down at Lady Stubbs sitting in his lap, “How are you good at science!?”

Lady Stubbs chose to lick her paw and not answer.

“Hey, what’s that?” Atsuhiro pointed to the brochure in Ren’s hand.

“Part of the reason why we were so late.” He placed it on the coffee table for everyone to see, “Morgana and I might be taking a trip to help heal someone.”

“Really?” Atsuhiro widened his eyes as he flipped it open, “A research hospital, huh? Top of the line stuff.”

Kaito froze.

Tobita glanced at Ren, “Who are you going to heal?”

“Kurogiri.” Ren crossed his arms with a frown, “Apparently he’s some sort of advanced Nomu, but he’s complete enough to where he may be able to remember who he was before... with a little help.”

“He was a classmate of Eraserhead and Present Mic!” Morgana chirped, “They were understandably upset when they found out.”

“... I see.” Atsuhiro read through it with saddened eyes, “I always thought there was something off about Kurogiri during my time with the League, but I never thought he was an actual Nomu . All For One and his Doctor were real pieces of work.”

Eri suddenly gasped as her book fell to the floor. They all stared as Kaito stood up suddenly, hands curled into fists. His expression was closed off, but he glanced at the brochure again before looking away as if it physically pained him.

“Kaito? What’s wrong?” Morgana asked.

“I...” He ducked his head, “I’ll be in my room.”

They watched as the man beelined to his room, not looking at anyone as his door firmly shut. The click of his lock sounded far too loud in the silent room.

“Uh... what was that all about?” Shuichi asked.

“Wait, let me see that.” Manami grabbed the brochure when Atsuhiro handed it over, “Oh no.”

“Oh no what?” Morgana looked between Kaito’s door and the brochure, “I feel like we’re missing something!”

“Um...” Manami plastered on a shaky smile as she turned to Eri, “Why don’t you go to your room and draw something pretty for Kaito?”

“O-okay...” Eri hopped down, grabbed the book off the floor, and gave them a tentative look before she went to her room.

“Come on.” Manami slid off the couch, “I think... we need to have this conversation in private.”

Ren exchanged confused glances between the equally befuddled group. Manami led them to Ren’s room and he opened the Velvet Room door for them to all pile in. She swiftly went into the Challenge Room where her laptop was hidden, the others on her heels. Ren spared a moment to wave at Lavenza as she poked her head through the hallway connecting to the central area of the Velvet Room.

“What do you really know about this hospital, Ren?” Manami asked as she opened her laptop and began typing.

“Literally nothing!” Morgana said, “We just learned about it an hour ago.”

“I’m so confused.” Shuichi muttered.

“Join the club.” Atsuhiro nodded.

“Merp!”

Manami sighed as she turned her laptop around, “Read this.”

Escaped Patient Puts Critical Quirk Research To A Halt

The Quirk Doomsday Theory, also known as the Quirk Singularity, is a theory which predicts that Quirks will continue to evolve through the generations until they become so powerful, it would be impossible to control them. This theory came about over 70 years ago, and at the time it was dismissed and even mocked.

Until now, when evidence of such a Quirk has surfaced for the first time in Japan.

Kazuya Ito was 4 years old when his Quirk activated. He and his parents attended an annual parade in Shibuya celebrating the police and heroes of the city. Disaster struck near the middle of the parade when the young boy began screaming and seizing for unknown reasons. The parade was halted and an ambulance was called for the child, where he was eventually transferred to a special hospital in Kyoto.

Our inside source states that Kazuya Ito has a powerful mutated Quirk unlike his mother’s Plant Manipulation or his father’s Grayscale(ability to turn any colorful object gray or white), but the ability to look into someone’s eyes and relive their lives entirely from their first memories to the present day. He spent years in a hospital with various doctors and specialists in a near comatose state. It’s unknown how many lives he relived during the fateful parade, but over time the research and data gathered from Kazuya provided vital intel and even verified the legitimacy of the Quirk Doomsday Theory.

It is unknown how he escaped after almost 20 years in Kyoto's finest research hospital, only that he was missing during the routine morning checks and all camera feeds of the incident were erased. The only valid testimony available, the reason why Kazuya has been labeled as an 'escaped patient', was that a nurse going home from a long shift thought she saw someone with Kazuya's description fleeing down a nearby alley at around 6 o'clock that morning.

"He's in no state to be safely discharged," Said one of the nurses, who wish to remain anonymous. "I hope we can reclaim him soon so he doesn't hurt himself... or others. Please contact a hero or the police immediately if you spot him."

"His memories are still a jumbled mess. It's quite possible he doesn't remember his name or what is a real memory of his past." One of the doctors commented, "He must be returned to our hands before he falls victim to psychosis. Heaven forbid he turns into a villain from the warped trauma his mind has been put through."

His parents and the nurse who supposedly saw him fleeing refused to provide comments.

Despite his escape, the loss of a patient with such an unusual Quirk put all research into the Quirk Singularity on hold until further notice.

"He..." Morgana wilted over Ren's shoulder, "He never told us he escaped from the hospital."

Ren turned away from the screen in disgust, "They talk about him as if he was crazy or something."

"Of course they do." Atsuhiro bore a sour twist of his lips, a mirror to all of their faces, "He was an invaluable test subject for their research. How else would they treat him, if not a dangerous animal?"

“Ren, where is that hospital in the brochure located?” Tobita asked.

“It’s a research hospital in... Kyoto.”

“The same hospital where he was.” Manami whispered.

“Did you know about this the whole time, my dear?” Tobita asked her, frowning.

“Of course I did!” She cried, “When I was first looking for places to live, well... I did thorough research.”

“And you didn’t say anything?” Shuichi asked, eyes still wide from the article.

“Why would I?” Manami looked away, “I wasn’t exactly doing legal hacking, you know. I figured if he ever ratted me out or something, then I could do the same in return. But with his quirk, maybe he had me figured out from the start. He never spoke a word about it, and neither did I.”

“Regardless, he still helped you when you needed a safe place to live.” Atsuhiro stated, “Like the threat of mutually assured destruction?”

“... Possibly. And now, after he continued helping us through everything... I would feel terrible if something happened to him now.”

“Hmmm, that article is a few years old. How old is Kaito now?” Atsuhiro asked.

“29.” Ren muttered.

“So his quirk activated when he was 4 and he spent 20 years in this hospital, that leaves 5 years of obscurity and an alias to throw off the scent.” Atsuhiro chuckled, “I have to give him due credit. It’s an impressive feat to pull off without claiming the title of phantom thief for himself.”

“What are we gonna do?” Shuichi asked.

“We’re not turning him in.” Ren growled.

“We would never .” Atsuhiro put a hand over his heart.

“Yeah! He’s part of our family!” Shuichi cried. “And every family needs a wise and cranky old grandpa to keep the rest of us in line!”

“Merp!”

“We may not be able to ignore it though,” Tobita frowned as he stared wistfully at the laptop, “Especially if he’s still labeled as an ‘escaped patient.’”

“But he’s proven himself more than able to take care of himself, and he’s never hurt anyone on purpose!” Morgana said with an irritated flick of his tail, “He’s part of our group too, which puts him under Nezu’s protection while he’s at U.A.”

“And the hospital has changed hands thanks to Gang Orca.” Ren stated, “It shouldn’t be the same as he remembers it. Hopefully.”

“I suppose it’s all the more reason for you to try and heal Kurogiri, so you can check the place out for yourself.” Atsuhiro paced in small circles, “He wouldn’t have to hide who he is anymore if we find a way to clear his name and give him the freedom he rightfully deserves.”

“Do you think he’d be okay if I tried hacking? If I erased any trace of him from public records-”

“That may not work this time, Manami.” Atsuhiro said. “Erasing everything wouldn’t solve this when there are doctors out there who know the truth, and the sudden disappearance of information on a case like this would bring more attention to it. Kaito would never have true peace of mind.”

“Besides, if we do this wrong, it would make him want to hide away from the world again.” Ren sighed as he dragged a hand down his face. "We'll have to find another way."

"Maybe we could ask Nezu." Shuichi stated. "I mean, he's seen how well Kaito takes care of Eri! And really, the rest of us, too."

Ren and Morgana looked at one another, "... And he knows what it feels like to be an experimental guinea pig." Ren said, "If anyone would understand what Kaito went through, it would definitely be him."

"Then it's settled." Atsuhiro clapped his hands together, "Ren and Morgana will handle Nezu, while the rest of us will do our best to cheer Kaito up. Make sure he feels like he's wanted here, like he's safe. More importantly, we can't let him find out we know the truth until we can fix this mistake that cost him his entire life. The poor man deserves to walk free without fear of doctors dragging him back to his own personal hell."

"That could work," Tobita said, eyes thoughtful, "Considering he hasn't taken off his Quirk Suppressant since we got here."

Ren snorted, "Sounds like a good plan, Atsuhiro."

"Of course! I'm happy to continue providing my expertise as long as these wild situations keep dropping on our laps!"

Shuichi rolled his eyes, "Don't puff yourself up too much."

Atsuhiro blinked, "Run that by me again, my dear lizard friend?"

"And this would be around the point where Kaito would tell you two to behave, or else." Tobita said with a warm smile.

"Enough bickering!" Morgana said, "Kaito's counting on us!"

"Morgana's right." Ren grinned as he looked to each of their faces, "We have our work cut out for us, and we can't fail him. Everyone agree?"

“Yes!” Shuichi threw up his hands.

“Merp!”

“Naturally.” Tobita stated.

Manami eagerly nodded.

“Of course.” Atsuhiro smirked, “It would be the least we could do for the adoptive grandfather of the group.”

It took three days to set up their plan.

On the first, any and all fliers about the hospital mysteriously disappeared. Kaito was cagey that next morning, but everyone acted like normal, even if Ren whispered to Eri that Kaito would need extra love and cuddles for a while, which she was more than happy to do.

Kaito relaxed more on the second day, though he still eyed any doors or windows as if looking for an escape route at all times. Eri asked him endless questions for her schooling to keep him busy, and Ren managed to wrangle in some of the teachers to include Kaito more in their conversations.

It was upon the third day during lunch that Nezu finally said something.

“Are you still having trouble with the app?” He asked as Ren put away the textbooks and paper, “You’ve been distracted lately. More than usual.”

“Well, yes. But it’s not that.”

“Then... are you worried about Kurogiri?” He smiled, “Not to worry! I should have the permission necessary for us to go visit him soon!”

Ren looked at Morgana, who raised his head as he lay on the couch, “I don’t know how to put it in nice words, though.”

“Hmm, I usually find it best to go right to the point for these kinds of conversations!” Nezu said jovially as he reached for the teapot to refill his cup.

“If you say so.” Ren leaned forward as Nezu began to pour tea, “You’ve hinted before that you were also a plaything to people who considered themselves gods. Do you remember saying that to me?”

“Oh! When I approached you before the Summer Camp.”

“What did you mean by that? You must’ve been treated as an experiment too, right?”

Nezu stopped. Tea poured from his cup and onto his desk as he stared at Ren.

“Nezu.” Morgana said.

The rat snapped out of it and held up the pot to stop the flow of tea. With a sigh, he cleaned up his mess with a few napkins set out for his lunch.

“I admit, this wasn’t the topic I was expecting.” Nezu stated, “Why do you suddenly wish to know of my past?”

“We were wondering how someone... say he was stuck in a hospital or lab for a long time, would go about gaining his freedom.” Morgana sat up and languidly stretched across the couch, “You know, to be treated as a person and not as an experiment with no will or rights of his own.”

Nezu looked in between them, and the sparkle within those beady black eyes intensified, “Are you concerned for the Nomu?”

“Partially.” Morgana stated, “What will happen to Kurogiri and the rest of them, should our healing powers work?”

Nezu hummed, “Depending on Kurogiri’s results and further testing, he will be aided by the hospital to learn how to be himself again, and how to live a normal life. If possible, the data could be used to aid the other captured Nomu in their recovery. I'll make sure they won't be taken advantage of." The rat flicked his gaze between them, taking in their tense shoulders and stern faces, "There's more to this, isn't there? Is this... perhaps about a person you care about?"

Ren and Morgana stiffened.

"Morgana said 'his' earlier, so that eliminates La Brava. Mr. Compress, Spinner... Gentle Criminal? No..." Nezu tilted his head, not breaking eye contact with Ren, "Is it perhaps... Kaito?"

Ren must've given it away somehow, in a blink or some small twitch, as Nezu nodded to himself.

"You know, I was always a little concerned for him. He is different within your group, so it's hard not to take notice. He's not a Phantom Thief and hasn't taken part in your grand heists, aside from providing you all a place to live. He hasn't shared his real name with me or any of my staff, yet he's earned a solid place of trust within your hearts." Nezu interlaced his paws, "Does he have that sort of past like you insinuated?"

Ren pursed his lips and stayed quiet, as did Morgana.

Nezu sighed, "Whatever you say will not leave this room, but if he is in this sort of trouble then I will do everything in my power to help him. I need the whole picture if I am to offer aid." The rat put on a bright smile that had a sharp edge to it, "After all, I know what it's like to be a lab rat, too."

Ren and Morgana traded hesitant looks, but at Ren's nod, they decided to share everything.

"It started when Kaito saw the brochure for the hospital Kurogiri is being taken to..." Morgana started.

Nezu listened intently to their story, and Ren showed him the same news article from 5 years ago.

“He knows who he is.” Ren had stood up at some point and began pacing, “He isn’t crazy or helpless, and he never once thought of turning to villainy. Hell, he’s dragged our asses out of the fire more than once!”

“That’s right.” Morgana said as his blue eyes were ablaze, “They’d have no right to take him back there! Right, Nezu?”

“To spend 20 years in such a place...” Nezu sighed, “No doubt I will be doing a thorough investigation of everything the past owners have done in that hospital. However, it would take a lot of work and everyone’s cooperation to secure Kaito’s freedom, the least of all several testimonies of Kaito’s competency and a full psych evaluation by Hound Dog.”

“We’ll do it.” Ren said.

Nezu smiled, “I’ll message Hound Dog right away so we can get this started! And... oh?”

“What is it?” Morgana asked.

“I received an e-mail from Tsukauchi. Kurogiri has been safely moved and we’ve been granted permission to visit him first thing tomorrow morning.” Nezu looked away from his screen, “Don’t worry about grading duties today. Go back to the dorms and prepare yourselves for tomorrow. In the meantime, I’ll have my staff collect your friends’ testimonies and message Hound Dog about the evaluation. You can leave everything to me.”

Ren smiled as the Devil Arcana within him brightened. “Nezu, thank you.”

Nezu beamed, “Think nothing of it! Now, run along and get yourselves some lunch!”

Ren packed up his things and, after Morgana jumped on his shoulder, they left.

Nezu's smile fell as his eyes returned to his monitor.

"Emails from Tsukauchi, Tsuragamae, and Ryoto at the same time?" Nezu eyed the forgotten Admiral Feesh sitting in the corner, "And now this situation with Kaito. This will be interesting indeed..."

They returned to the dorms and found Kaito alone, sitting on one of the couches. He had his eyes closed and his arms crossed, a frown on his face.

"Where'd everyone go?" Morgana asked.

"They conveniently left with some of the teachers after a message from Nezu." Kaito said, "Mr. Compress said I should wait here."

"Oh, do you want curry?" Ren offered. "We could eat together."

"No." Kaito stood and opened his eyes to stare right at Ren. The colors in Kaito's eyes shifted like streams of light wavering underwater. He huffed after a moment, "... So that's what's been going on. No wonder everyone's been acting weird, but I suppose it's my own damn fault for giving myself away. Though I'm glad Manami never said anything until now."

Ren looked at Kaito's wrist. He wasn't wearing his Quirk Suppressant.

"Kaito..." Morgana jumped down from Ren's shoulder and rubbed against Kaito's legs, "We only want to help. Holding something like this in for so long... I'm sorry we didn't notice sooner."

"It's alright." Kaito sighed as he rubbed the back of his head, "I knew it was only a matter of time."

At that moment, the door opened and Hound Dog walked in. He paused at the hallway where the entryway connected to the common room, eyes soft as he looked between Ren and Kaito.

“I suppose you already know what I’m here for?”

“... Yeah.”

Hound Dog sighed, “You can refuse if you want to. However, we can only keep this contained in house for so long once we start putting other paperwork in. And since we can’t exactly ignore this...”

“I’ll do it. Are we doing it here?”

“No.” Hound Dog shook his head, “It’s best if we do this in my office, where it’s private.”

Kaito nodded.

Hound Dog walked towards the door. Kaito began to follow.

“Kaito.” Ren grabbed the man’s wrist, “We don’t judge you. We’ll support you with everything we have, okay?”

“I know.” Kaito gave Ren a wry smile, “Do you know I’m not even angry?”

Morgana’s eyes widened, “You’re not?”

Kaito looked at Hound Dog, who waited by the open door patiently, “No. Without you, I would be stuck in the Raven’s Nest, alone in that suffocating silence.” With his free hand, he reached up and touched the medallion hidden under his shirt, “You’ve put your trust in me this entire time, and if I return all the trust you’ve shown me now... if I can finally get my life back... I won’t have to hide behind ‘Kaito’ anymore. I can just be... me.”

“Kaito...” Morgana whispered.

Ren let go, and they watched as Hound Dog and Kaito left the dorms. Ren turned and collapsed on the closest sofa with a sigh.

"You did the right thing." Satanael said.

"I agree." Fafnir cackled, "My Hermit is stronger than he gives himself credit for! He must take his fate into his own hands now."

Morgana jumped up and lay over Ren's chest. "He's not mad, but I still feel bad for starting this behind his back. I hope he'll be okay."

Ren hummed, "We'll leave it to Nezu and the rest."

"I guess. Oh, have we tried 'Hospital' for the MetaNav?"

Ren reached down for his bag, which was spilled out beneath the couch, and grabbed his phone. He opened the MetaNav to Oracle and Skull's world, all filled out except for the Location.

"Hospital."

"No match found."

"... Asylum?" Morgana guessed.

"No match found."

Morgana groaned as Ren tossed the phone back in his bag, "It was worth a shot."

Ren stared up at the ceiling in thought.

Kurogiri.

Kaito.

The Nomu.

This hospital...

If they could give embers of hope to the last people with whom the world abandoned before they went home...

Well, Ren felt like it was the least they could do.

More cursed white.

Kurogiri didn't remember falling asleep, only to awaken in another white room. They must've drugged him and moved him somewhere else. He was standing this time, tied to some contraption with even more wires and machinery attached to all sorts of monitors. The sunless walls and floor were white, and people in white doctor's coats hovered around him, but this room was bigger and there was no glass wall separating himself and exhausted coffee colored eyes.

Eraserhead leaned against the far wall, watching him.

"Where is Shigaraki Tomura?" Kurogiri asked.

The doctors around him hesitated, and one hurried out of the room for some reason, but he continued to stare at Eraserhead.

"He's not here." Eraserhead stated dryly, yet his voice trembled, "He's the least of your concerns right now."

Kurogiri narrowed his eyes, "What's that supposed to mean?"

The door opened and several people... and other beings, walked in.

Detective Tsukauchi, Present Mic, more doctors with clipboards. But Kurogiri's eyes snapped to the golden gaze of an empyrean woman floating towards him, the many layers of her kimono and the smoky scarf around her shoulders fluttered in a nonexistent breeze.

She led the other divine beings: a floating blue woman with dual swords, a red and black humanoid male with golden wings attached to a spire at his back, another god dressed in blue with great wings attached to his boots. One other woman stayed behind them, floating yet again as if gravity was a force to be ignored.

“The Trickster and Magician have already used Concentrate.” She said, “And if anything goes wrong, then I will put him to sleep to prevent further harm.”

“Thank you, Lakshmi.” Detective Tsukauchi murmured before he looked to the other gods, “... You may begin whenever you’re ready.”

Kurogiri looked back and forth as they surrounded him, and being tied to this contraption, he couldn’t see where they were in this strange new room. Only the empyrean woman stayed in eyesight, yet to the side to offer a perfect view of Eraserhead and Present Mic.

Kurogiri stilled as she reached for his face, undeterred by the swirling mist coating his body. He felt her soft touch on his cheek, and something in his heart warmed at it. Her golden eyes, and the divine light shining from her body, was like feeling the sunrise for the first time after years of being trapped in the night.

“Worry not.” She whispered as her hand pulled away, “We will make this quick.”

“What are you talking about?” Kurogiri pulled against his restraints, “What are you- Get away from me!”

She backed away and held up both hands, palms facing him. A static prickle charged the air and colorful light erupted underneath him. Kurogiri jolted as ivy and ferns made of glowing blues and purples sprouted and grew rapidly. The glowing plants bathed the pure white room with their vibrancy. They shuffled as they entwined the entire contraption he was trapped in, the scent of a warm summer’s day wafting through the room when the vines began to entangle him.

“What are you doing!?” He yelled as a swarm of vibrant butterflies surrounded him in a whirlwind of fluttering wings, “Stop this at once!”

The largest butterfly landed on his chest, and the world was drowned in a haze of colorless fog before the blackness swallowed him. He felt as if he was falling into darkness when something inside him writhed and screamed, as if a fat worm burrowing within his soul was being ripped from its parasitic moorings.

A lone star shone in the darkness when its wailing stopped.

Kurogiri reached for it-

"Ah, you regained your memories again, have you?" The Doctor whispered from within a fluid-filled vat as purple mist floundered, "We can't have that. Don't worry, a little nap and you'll be as good as-"

A great and holy light tore into the memory with a ravenous anger, flooding his entire body with fire. Was he burning? Was he screaming in pain? The Doctor's voice was drowned out and smothered, the scars the man left behind crumbled away like the yolk of chains over him-

Then... the pain stopped.

He was enveloped in white.

But not the emotionless white he had been trapped in before.

This was... peaceful. Welcoming and warm. It was like breaking through water and taking the first gasp of air as the stormy seas calmed. A dark fog lifted from him and dissipated into nothing.

"It's okay." A motherly voice whispered to him, "Wake up, now. You have people waiting for you."

He opened his eyes to a woman hugging him tightly, the silk of her kimono brushing his face. She backed away, cupping his face in both hands with a warm smile.

"Good morning." It was the same motherly voice from seconds ago.

“G-good... morning...?”

She floated away as he held up his head, white hair falling into his vision. Familiar figures by the wall gasped.

Detective Tsukauchi was pale as he stepped forward, “Do you... what is your name?”

“My name...?” He blinked as his mind became clear, “My name is... Shirakumo Oboro.”

His eyes trailed from Tsukauchi to two men who’s cheeks trailed with steady streams of tears.

“Shouta... Hizashi...”

Hizashi burst into frantic cries as he rushed forward, and Oboro was wrapped up in another hug. Another pair of arms joined in soon after, clothed in black. Doctors whispered under the flutter of blue cinders, and after a few moments his arms were free.

He clutched both of his best friends as they all held each other.

“It... feels like I just woke up from a bad nightmare.” Oboro whispered.

Hizashi hugged the both of them tighter as he freely cried into Oboro’s shoulder.

“Welcome back.” Shouta’s voice trembled, “Don’t ever do something like this ever again.”

“I’m not planning on it.” Oboro pulled away, “I... I remember everything. What happened that day... being turned into a villain. Shouta, I hurt you and so many others. I am so, so sorry.”

Shouta gave him an incredulous teary look, “It wasn’t your fault. None of it was.”

“Yeah!” Hizashi sniffled, “None of that matters right now! What matters now is you getting better because we have a whole hell of a lot to catch up on!!”

Oboro grinned, “Yeah. Yeah, we do.”

Ren looked up when Tsukauchi opened the door to their secluded waiting room. He and Morgana already knew what happened before the words pilled out of Tsukauchi’s mouth.

“It... it worked.” Tsukauchi was still pale, “I can’t believe it.”

“I suppose Eraserhead and Present Mic are with Shirakumo?” Nezu asked.

“Yeah.” Tsukauchi ran a hand down his face, “The doctors are running tests now, but the three of them will be inseparable for a while. It may be quite some time before Shirakumo is discharged yet... I still can’t believe we got him back.”

“That’s quite alright.” Nezu hopped down from the stiff seat, grabbing a suitcase from underneath it, “We can finish up other things while Eraserhead and Present Mic are busy!”

Tsukauchi groaned, “The work never stops, does it?”

“I’m afraid not, detective.”

“Wait, other things?” Morgana blinked rapidly, “What other things!?”

Ren stared at the briefcase in Nezu’s clutches.

Kaito didn’t come back to the dorms until later yesterday evening and, upon seeing all of the Phantom Thieves’ hesitant faces, smiled wanly and went to his room without another word. The poor man looked exhausted. Ren and the others had left for Kyoto long before the other vigilantes or teachers woke up.

“Does it have something to do with Kaito?” Ren asked.

Morgana stiffened on his shoulder when Tsukauchi exchanged a knowing glance with Nezu.

“... Indeed.” Nezu’s smile was all bared teeth, “It seems Kaito was not the only one who suffered from this hospital's previous owners. They kept quite the closet full of skeletons!”

“What are you talking about?” Ren asked with a frown.

“Come.” Nezu made for the door, “We will explain.”

They left the small waiting room and walked through the hallway. Ren eyed the door of Kurogiri’s... no, Shirakumo’s room. Voices could be heard beyond the door, but they faded as Nezu and Tsukauchi led them away.

This hospital wasn’t the biggest in Kyoto by any means. It was rather small and private. Sequestered away from a majority of the city and surrounded by the maze of alleyways. Although it was small, Nezu explained it was incredibly well funded to perform all sorts of research with state-of-the-art tech.

Too well funded.

As they walked through the halls, Ren wondered what room had been Kaito’s. They passed nurses and doctors who bowed their heads in greeting, almost like submissive dogs who were caught doing something they shouldn’t. Eventually, they reached their destination in another hospital wing.

Waiting in front of the window of the only patient Ren or Morgana could see, was Ryoto and Chief Tsuragamae. Ren’s chest tightened when Ryoto met his eyes, but he managed to hide his discomfort with his Personas whispering encouragements within the mindscape.

“We already received word about Kurogiri.” Ryoto said as he kept staring at Ren and Morgana with an easy smile, “Well done.”

“... Thank you.” Ren kept a respectful distance.

“And this patient?” Nezu asked as he faced the window.

Ren looked in, brows furrowed. A woman lay inside, attached to life support machines and monitors. Her black hair was streaked with white, and from her gaunt cheeks and bony arms she looked more of a skeleton than Yagi did before Kamino.

“Our agents confirmed her identity.” Chief Tsuragamae whispered, “The files Ryoto found seem to be correct, as we feared.”

“Who is she?” Ren asked.

“Kunikazu’s mother.” Ryoto said.

Morgana’s jaw dropped, “His mother!? Why is she here!? What’s going on?”

“She’s been here since he was a child.” Ryoto sighed, “Long story short, Kunikazu’s uncle was the HPSC President at the time and his family was targeted by villains because of it. The attack led to severe injuries to both Kunikazu and his mother. He awoke some time after the incident, but she... did not.”

“Is that why this hospital is so well funded?” Ren asked, “Because of her?”

“That is partially correct.” Ryoto sighed, “But it also begins a frightening chain of events that have been buried for far too long. Fearing the worst would happen, Kunikazu’s uncle kept her here in secret, but this hospital gained significant funding. He wrangled in governors and other highly ranked government officials for the money. Even the previous Prime Minister was in on it.”

“Why would they support Kunikazu’s uncle?” Morgana asked, eyes comically wide.

“For advances in research and development for ways to contain quirks.” Chief Tsuragamae sighed forlornly, “Dangerous or otherwise. In return for their revenue, Kunikazu’s uncle, and eventually Kunikazu himself, increased their funding for more Hero Agencies in their respective regions.”

“Which in turn lead to facilities like Tartarus, and the development of Quirk Suppressants and Iron Maidens.” Tsukauchi muttered. “This is but one of many private hospitals where such research was conducted, most of the time against the wills of its patients.”

Ren’s eyes widened, and he looked to Nezu.

“Families were paid off or threatened in secret.” Nezu stated, frowning deeply at the slumbering woman, his paw tightening around the briefcase’s handle, “The timeline matches up far back to when I first took in Recovery Girl all those years ago. To think, there were so many more victims that were never seen until now.”

“And Kunikazu being raised by his uncle and fearing what could happen to his mother if word of these hospitals ever got out...” Chief Tsuragamae crossed his arms.

“Their precious house of cards would burn down if only a single person ratted everything out.” Ryoto studied the woman with deep intensity, “And it would most likely be Kunikazu’s mother who would pay the price for it.”

“After all of this,” Nezu frowned, “His erratic behavior in prison begins to make sense.”

“Unfortunately.” Ryoto rubbed his temple with a black-gloved hand, “Gang Orca knew nothing when he first offered to take over this place, but we’re working on making reparations to those who were wronged, and arresting those who had a hand in it. Many of these 'patients' were but children when they were first brought here."

"Speaking of which," Nezu faced Ryoto, "I know of another patient who deserves such reparations now."

Ryoto's eyebrows shot up, "Really? Who?"

"It's all in this briefcase here." Nezu smiled again, but it was sharp, "Someone who was wrongfully trapped here for over 20 years. We have several testimonies, a clean psych evaluation from Hound Dog, and more to prove his competency."

"... I see." Ryoto eyed Ren again before he studied Nezu, "Shall we discuss the details in private, then?"

"Yes. Let's."

Ren reached a hand out as the pair began walking away, "Nezu-"

"Stay with Tsukauchi for the time being, Amamiya." Nezu stated with the same razor edged smile, "I'll take care of it. I promise."

They could do nothing but watch them disappear around the corner to a more private room. Ren sighed as he turned towards the window. He just healed Kurogiri, maybe he could-

"I know that look." Tsukauchi stood beside Ren, "But it's not a good idea."

"Why not?"

"We got permission to heal Kurogiri, but she's a whole other case."

"Tsukauchi's correct." Tsuragamae stated, "In normal and... legal cases, you'd need the permission of the family to perform any kind of healing quirk on someone in the hospital. I don't think Kunikazu is in his right mind to give any sort of permission no matter how strong your abilities are, and we may not get the power of attorney from him before you go home.”

“Oh. Then... can I give her a gift instead?”

Tsuragamae blinked, “What sort of gift?”

Ren donned his Joker costume as gently as possible. He reached into his breast pocket and pulled out a string of orange rosary, in the center lay a large white bead with a swirled red symbol in the center.

“I don’t know if she’s religious, but a token of Amaterasu could help put her at ease.”

Tsuragamae leaned over to inspect it, “Very well. I’ll ask a nurse to allow you in the room for a minute, but I can offer nothing more.”

The nurse swept him into the room, and watched him like a hawk as he approached the bed. He lay the rosary beads on the woman’s chest, careful not to disturb any wires or the oxygen mask on her face. He had enough time to give her a respectful bow before the nurse pushed him out.

He only got enough time to see that the woman’s name was Harumi before the nurse shut the door.

Tsukauchi patted Ren on the shoulder once he dispelled his costume, “Your heart’s in the right place, kid.” The detective chuckled as Ren felt his cheeks heat up, “Why don’t we get some grub? The others could be busy for some hours before you get to go back to U.A., and what a better way to pass time than sampling local dishes?”

“Is there a sushi place nearby!?” Morgana asked.

“Of course you would ask that.” Ren muttered.

Tsuragamae waved them off as Tsukauchi urged them down the hall, Morgana yammering the entire way about sushi... once again.

“Got the message from Nezu. They’re on their way back.” Vlad said several hours later.

“And Kurogiri?” Midnight asked.

Vlad set his phone on the coffee table, “Healed. Apparently, he remembers everything he did as a villain and feels terrible about it. Present Mic and Eraser spent several hours with him before visiting time ended.”

“I figured Joker and Mona’s unified healing would work just fine.” Atsuhiro stated as he crossed his legs and shuffled his cards from where he played poker with Shuichi, Manami, and surprisingly, Eri, with whom they were teaching how to play, “I don’t know why you were all so worried.”

Kaito clasped his hands together and stared at the floor. His thumb ran over the rim of his Quirk Suppressant, he had put it back on after his... extended talk with Hound Dog. Now, he awaited his fate.

“Well, it’ll be a bit before they get back.” Midnight smirked at the poker group, “How’s it going, sweetie?”

“U-Um... I’m not sure.” Eri shifted through her cards.

Midnight peeked around her shoulder and gasped.

“What is it?” Manami asked.

“Nothing.” Midnight chuckled, “Nothing at all.”

“Yeah, well... Sorry, Eri-chan, but I’ll be taking the whole pot because Lady Stubbs needs a new pair of shoes!” Shuichi stated as he threw down his cards, “Full House!”

“Oh yeah?” Manami smiled sweetly as she put her cards down of mostly sixes, “Four of a kind.”

“I’m afraid the take is rightfully mine!” Atsuhiro threw his cards down with a flourish, “Straight flush!”

“I-I don’t know if this is good or not...” Eri placed down her cards, and the rest of them jumped out of their chairs.

“A Royal Flush!?” Shuichi cried.

Atsuhiro groaned and slammed his head on the table, “She’s a natural. All future players should fear her power.”

“Oh.” Eri patted him on the head, “I didn’t really know what I was doing anyway. I-I just collected the hearts because they remind me of Ren-nii, a-and just counted up like Uncle Compress showed me.”

Manami stared at Tobita, who stood at the head of the table and acted as their dealer, “You didn’t...?”

“Of course not. A gentleman would never cheat. She won on her own merit.”

“Do I win?” Eri whispered, eyes wide.

Midnight pushed the mound of art supplies, snacks, and the small pile of coins and bills at her, “You did, sweetie. Congratulations.”

Her eyes sparkled as she took a bag of potato chips and held them out for Shuichi, “O-okay, but I want to share it!”

“Eri-chan!” Shuichi burst into tears as he accepted it with both hands, “You’re so kind!!”

Atsuhiro sighed, but he had a proud smile nonetheless. That fell as Kaito felt the man’s eyes on him, “Why don’t you join us, Kaito? Get your mind off of certain things for a while.”

“... No thanks.”

The common room went quiet. He hunched over and continued to stare at the floor.

“Kaito...” Cementoss looked up from his book, concerned.

Thirteen hopped onto the seat next to Kaito, “You know, you might’ve had a rocky start, but Nezu would never let them take you back to that place.”

“Damn straight.” Midnight said as she sauntered towards the back of the couch, “You’re one of us now, and we take care of our own.”

“Besides, even if those assholes did try to take you back there, we’d totally break you out!” Shuichi stated with a wide grin. The teachers deadpanned at him, “What? You know it’s true!!”

“They would have to steal you from our cold, dead hands, dearie.” Recovery Girl gingerly sipped her tea from another table, smiling like the classic sweet old lady that could still kick your ass, “Nezu rescued me from a similar situation when I was a young girl. I know in my heart he fought tooth and nail for you, and once you get him started on something like that there’s no way he’d ever lose.”

“I...” Kaito couldn’t look at anyone as he felt shame and embarrassment crawl up his back, “... I don’t know what say.”

Eri scooted off her seat and ran over to him. Her little arms wrapped around him and held him tight, “They’d never take you from me, either. I wouldn’t let them!”

“Awww.” Midnight cooed, “Nobody would stand a chance against her, would they?”

“Nope.” Vlad said.

Atsuhiro pretended to wipe a tear from his eye, “They grow up so fast...”

Kaito chuckled dryly, and despite himself a smile grew, "Thank you, Eri. Everyone."

Midnight firmly nodded, "You'll see. We just need to wait for Nezu and the others to get back and then-"

The door to Ren's room opened. Every hero collectively gasped as Ren, Morgana, Nezu, Present Mic, and Eraserhead stepped out into the common room. The vigilantes, plus Kaito and Eri, traded knowing glances.

"Wha- We weren't expecting you back for another two hours!" Midnight cried.

"How did you..." Ectoplasm pointed between the group and the front door.

Ren blinked innocently, "A shortcut through the Velvet Room."

Morgana grinned, "Who knew it would work across such long distances!?"

"Well, you did appear at the USJ in the same manner." Cementoss said.

"Hacks..." Midnight muttered to herself. She walked up to Eraserhead and Present Mic and held one of their hands in her own, "How are you two?"

Eraserhead sighed, but there was a great weight removed from his shoulders, "Good. Great. I think... I need some time to process everything."

They watched the man walk outside.

"You look exhausted, Mic." Ectoplasm stated, "You should go get some sleep."

Present Mic grinned, "I think I will! I haven't slept in like two days!!"

“Go on before I put you to sleep, mister.” Midnight pushed him towards his bedroom door.

“Alright, alright! I’m going!”

Present Mic’s door closed. Several eyes fell to Nezu in anticipation after he cleared his throat, and everyone watched as he approached Kaito, who stiffened.

Eri stayed by him and held his hand as Nezu stopped in front of them, smiling. Nezu held out a single slim folder, “Here.”

“What is it?” Kaito reached for it, “You’re not... taking me back there, are you?”

Nezu chuckled, but it wasn’t patronizing, “Of course not! See for yourself!”

Kaito swallowed as he grabbed the folder. It was a bit overwhelming to have everyone staring at him as he opened it. Inside was an envelope and an official document stamped with the new HPSC’s President’s name and several doctor’s signatures he didn’t recognize. Kaito’s eyes widened as he read through it once, twice. Three times.

“What’s it say!?” Shuichi asked after an extended silence. Manami punched him in the shin for being loud.

“This is... an official apology. ‘Due to the extenuating circumstances behind your unlawful internment, and with the provided testimonies and certified psych evaluation, the individual named Kazuya Ito is hereby offered a clean bill of health and is no longer a patient at this institution. The responsible parties will be handled with the full extent of the law. As recompense, we hope the provided funds will help alleviate any harm done...’” Kaito put the folder down to open the small envelope.

“That’s a lot of zeroes!” Midnight cried.

It was. Kaito had never seen so many zeroes on a single check. It would be enough to buy several Raven Nests and fund them all for a significant length of time, even without any customers.

“This calls for a celebration!” Midnight cackled. “Let’s bring out the booze!”

“Midnight...” Ectoplasm’s face fell in his hand.

“There are children present.” Yagi stated in an incredulous expression.

“And you all have classes to teach tomorrow!” Recovery Girl chastised, “I am not healing any hang overs!”

“Actually...” Ren held up the several bulging plastic bags in his arms, “Tsukauchi was kind enough to buy some supplies for a celebration when we found out the good news.”

“We even have some sparkling juice!” Morgana stated.

“That’ll work!” Midnight dove for the bags with grabby hands, and Ren laughed as he handed most of them to her.

She fled to the kitchen, and many followed the smell of food and fizzy drinks.

“Here, Eri.” Ren dug through the last bag and handed her another package, “We got these for you from a sweet shop in Kyoto.”

She smiled as she held the package of dango, staring at the store’s colorful logo on it. “Thank you!”

Ren and Morgana handed out snacks to the rest of the Phantom Thieves. They simply smiled as they put the biggest package of pocky in Kazuya’s hand, and before he knew it he was dragged towards the kitchen.

Midnight poured everyone champagne glasses filled with vibrant orange juice with bubbles trickling up the sides.

“Should we be celebrating without Eraser and Mic?” Cementoss asked. “They are the two out of the three people who should be celebrating the most.”

“We’ll save them some food for later.” Midnight said with a wink, she then raised her glass, “To Shirakumo and Kaito’s health and success! Cheers!”

“Cheers! ”

The next small stretch of time went strangely for Kazuya. Fried noodles, desserts, sweets, and no small number of tempura were passed around. The atmosphere of the dorms was light and even festive, yet he found himself staring off into space, feeling as if he was floating out of his body.

The folder and the enormous check stayed in his hands, the items heavy enough to keep him somewhat centered... yet oddly light in a way he’s never experienced as his true self, and not as a memory of someone else. Eventually, the party got too rowdy, with Shuichi and Midnight shamelessly guzzling down the bottles of sparkling juice in some form of contest when everyone else had their fill.

He got up amidst the chaos and walked outside, almost invisible save for the pair of silver and gold eyes following him.

The silence of the private garden made him breath a sigh of relief. Kazuya held the folder tightly to his chest and looked up at the moon through the bare tree branches. The last leaf on the ginko tree, brown and crinkled, chose that moment to fall. He idly watched it as it drifted through the air to land in front of him.

“Are you okay?”

Kazuya looked over his shoulder to Ren, "I am, I think." He snorted, "I must still be in shock."

Ren stepped closer, "How does it feel?"

Kazuya sank into the bench under the ginko tree, and Ren joined him after a moment, "Freeing." He looked down to the shining band on his wrist, glinting in the moonlight as he held it up, "Before you came into the Raven's Nest that night, I was just hiding from the world. I was always afraid of being found out someday, afraid of having to go back to that place... but as you and Morgana, and eventually the others, continued your adventures, I began to feel alive again. That fear eventually faded to the back of my mind until I almost forgot about it."

"I still feel bad for springing it on you so fast." Ren said with a frown.

"I admit that when we got to U.A., I knew the chance of being found out was a lot higher." Kazuya smirked at Ren, "And these last few days were hell, but as I hold this in my hands -" He gestured with the folder, "-the chance of being free, to do what I want with my life without being afraid... I feel like everything until now was worth it."

"Do you have any plans, then?" Ren asked as he leaned back on the bench, "If you're not going to be a Phantom Thief like the others..."

"First, after you go home, I want to see my parents. We've been apart so long I don't know if they'll even recognize me."

"They're your parents." Ren whispered, "Of course they will."

Kazuya's smile widened, "And then after, I... There were days at the Raven's Nest where I daydreamed what it could've been like, if I never went to that hospital. In the end, I figured out what I would've done with my life. I'll work to become a teacher."

Ren gaped, "Really?"

“My quirk has given me so much experience through many lives, so I could help a lot of people with it. I also want to stay with Eri for as long as possible, maybe I could ask Nezu to help me become a teacher and go from there.”

Ren nodded, “That’s an admirable goal, Kaito.”

“Kaito. Kaito .” Kazuya set the folder on his lap and unclasped the pendant around his neck. “I think it’s time to put that name away for good, don’t you think?”

Ren watched as Kazuya held it up with a smile, studying the twin phoenixes on the crest before startling when Kazuya held it out to him.

“This is...” Ren shook his head, “That’s your family crest, right?”

“Right. Remember it was given to me by my mother so I wouldn’t forget who I was again. However,” Kazuya nudged it closer to Ren, “Thanks to you, I know who I am now, and I won’t ever forget again. Besides, you’re family to me anyway. I want you to have it so you never forget this ‘cranky old grandpa’, as Shuichi put it, when you go back home.”

Ren chuckled as he accepted it. He stared at it for a few moments before he closed his fingers over it, the silver necklace dangling from between his fingers, “I’ll take good care of it, Kazuya. That’s a promise I won’t ever break.”

Ren held his fist out to Kazuya, who grinned and fist bumped him back.

They stared up at the night sky for a while longer before a chilly breeze cut through their clothes.

“Let’s go back inside.” Kazuya said as he stood, “I hope they saved some food for us.”

Ren smirked, “If not, then I’ll make a fresh batch of curry. Just for you.”

They returned to the kitchen. The vibe had died down a little, with Shuichi and Midnight groaning as they lay their heads over the table with several empty juice bottles around them, but there was still plenty of food to go around.

Kazuya and Ren sat down together and ate, having easy conversations with the others as they wandered around the jovial kitchen. Eraserhead had returned at some point, staring almost reverently at Ren as if he wanted to say something, but he simply closed his mouth and stared at his untouched plate of food.

Perhaps it would be Eraserhead who had the next heart to heart with Ren when the timing was better, Kazuya thought.

More time passed this way, until it was late enough to where they could easily call it a night.

Until Eri came to them, grasping the empty dango package.

“Ren-nii...”

“What’s wrong?” Ren stared as she began twisting the bag in her hands, “Did they make your stomach hurt?”

She shook her head, “No, they were really good! Actually I... I have an idea for that app on your phone.”

Conversation stilled as people stared at Eri in shock.

“Eri, you know what it means, right?” Kazuya asked. “The Location is the last thing we need for it to work.”

“Y-yeah. It would mean... Ren-nii might leave sooner, but he would get to go home and see the people he loves, too.”

“We’ve guessed almost every Location in the book, my little flower.”
Atsuhiro bore a frown, “So don’t be sad if it doesn’t work, okay?”

Eri nodded.

Everyone gathered around as Ren retrieved his phone and opened the app. He held it out for Eri, who looked at the dango bag for a moment before she stared at the phone in unrelenting determination.

“Candy shop.”

“Match found.”

Silence.

Then chaos erupted through the dorm.

“Oh! This is-!!”

“What is it, Oracle!?”

“W-we... we finally have a connection! Wait, something's coming through! Skull, it's-”

It is time. At last.

See you all October 7th :)

Swear To My Bones

Chapter 95: Swear To My Bones

I totally did not in any way, shape, or form, cry at all while writing this chapter... Nope.

I say, as a complete liar. Who is also extremely sick at the moment so please forgive any mistakes myself or the wonderful betas didn't catch...

Also, be sure to read the end notes for important bits of info!

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

The party came to an abrupt halt, and it was decided that they would open the rift tomorrow night after some rest and to be sure the students would be under strict curfew.

Ren and Morgana awoke the next morning before anyone else.

Tension descended as everyone came in for breakfast and greeted him like any other morning, as if they weren't fighters preparing themselves for a battle that would decide the fate of their home.

Ren poured coffee for the others like usual, trying to keep his shaking hands busy as he passed the hot cups around. Thirteen and Hound Dog smiled over their pots and pans as he returned to the counter, but they hesitated when someone sputtered.

Ren's eyes widened when Midnight set down her coffee mug in a rush and reached for her napkin to clean herself with. Other teachers and the vigilantes stared at Ren in concern.

"What is it?" He asked.

“Your coffee...” Aizawa pursed his lips, “It’s burnt.”

“What ?” Ren gaped at the pot he used to brew it, “I... sorry.”

“It’s quite alright.” Gentle Criminal rose from his seat and gently ushered Ren to sit, “How about we have tea this morning instead? A calming brew will do well, I think...”

A tiny hand reached over and grabbed his wrist, and he gave Eri a wan smile at her support. Ren never saw the traded looks of concern from the others as he kept his eyes on the table for the rest of breakfast.

Nezu and Morgana were hefty weights on his shoulders as they left for Ren’s lessons. The students stepped out of his way at his distant gaze edged with nerves, which included most of 1-A staring after him with various levels of concern or shock.

Ren didn’t comment on the clumps of fine hair drifting from Morgana’s back as he curled in Ren’s lap for the next few hours, with Nezu trying to draw them into deeper conversations to make the time to pass easier.

“Ren.” Nezu’s voice was firm when he rose from his seat for lunch bell, spine firm and paws steepled, “Everything will be alright.”

Morgana winced when Ren wiped a few more bundles of fur from his pants, “I know. I just... I’m hoping nothing goes wrong, that everyone is okay .”

Nezu nodded, smiling even as the fur floated over his desk, “As do I. But that’s why we’re doing this together, hmm? You’re not going through this alone!”

“... Right.”

The lunch hour found themselves at the Shinsou dorm, under Hitoshi’s watchful gaze. Tobita and Atsuhiro’s voices quietly meshed with Risumi and Ayumu's in the kitchen as they explained the situation in dull whispers, and he felt their looks like hot pokers in his side.

"Hey," Hitoshi nudged Ren's shoulder, "Are you sure I can't do anything to help?"

Ren blinked at him, "Maybe take care of Eri? You should probably stay here for the night, just in case something else happens."

Hitoshi's hands balled into fists, "Yeah. Sure."

The agonizing stretch of the sun seemed to last an entire century when they left the Shinsou dorm, but the longer the day droned on, the more agitated he and his Personas became. Morgana suffered the same. Staring off into space. Meditating unsuccessfully. Walking endless circles in the carpet.

At last, the school day came to an end, and they didn't taste their early supper as anticipation overwhelmed them. It was a small blessing that night came early because of the late autumn. Ectoplasm clones were posted at each student dorm due to the mandatory curfew. Joker and Mona gave Eri a long hug before they departed for the USJ, and it was almost too painful to watch her silent tears as Kazuya held her, his own expression a hair away from crumbling.

The facility was still in disarray, the only repairs were the sparkling fountain and seamless central plaza surrounded by complete and utter desolation.

"Trickster, if I could have a moment." Lavenza stated when heroes and vigilantes were spread around the USJ, divine weapons and armor at the ready.

Joker looked up from the app, "What is it?"

“I believe when you connect with the Chariot and Hermit’s new world, that only yourself, the Magician, and I should cross the space between. Perhaps a small force of Personas as well, but no more.”

“What!?” Spinner shrieked.

“You seriously can’t be suggesting you go practically alone to an entirely new world,” Eraserhead stated, glaring, “That would be suicide!”

“No, it wouldn’t be.” Margaret stated as she, Theodore, and Elizabeth waited dutifully beneath the rift.

“Why would you think so?” Nezu asked calmly.

“It would cause the least amount of disturbance.” Theodore said.
“We need to do this quietly unless we want to let Yaldabaoth know we’re up to something.”

Elizabeth sighed, “Boring, but we can’t be stupid about this by sending all of you.”

“The Trickster and Magician would be vital for reuniting with the other Phantom Thieves with the least amount of stress on the other world’s inhabitants.” Lavenza looked around, “Making a grave misstep now is not an option.”

Gentle Criminal exchanged a long look with La Brava, “I suppose that’s a valid point.”

“And the rest of us Attendants need to stay here and guard the rift.” Margaret smiled, “Leave this end to us, Trickster.”

“Ren, Morgana, Lavenza...” Mr. Compress tipped his hat to them, throwing his Arsene mask in shadow, “Be careful.”

“And come back safe!” La Brava added.

“We’ll be back shortly with news. And hopefully with Oracle and Skull.” Joker faced the rift. “Satanael. Amaterasu. Sandalphon. Hastur.”

Each Persona materialized at the whisper of their name and formed a protective circle around Joker, Mona in his Metaverse form clinging to Joker’s shoulder, and Lavenza.

“Whenever you’re ready, Trickster.” Amaterasu held out her arms as she took the lead spot, “I will light our path as best as I am able.”

“Okay.” Joker took a breath as he and Mona stared at the app, “I’m connecting this world to the one where Skull and Oracle are... now.”

The air churned as the rift undulated. Joker’s teeth chattered at the hum of unknown energy lacing the USJ as reality split open before them. But unlike when Metatron invaded, there was no Red Rain, and the void wasn’t wholly empty black space. Something glinted within the darkness and approached at lightning speed.

Their breath was stolen as shimmering golden energy poured from the rift and trickled down like waterfall in the shape of a stairway that stopped at Joker’s feet. Joker took the first step up and waited.

“It seems stable.” He said.

“This is the same energy I felt when I first touched the rift.” Satanael said, as Joker and Lavenza began to climb, “How... curious.”

They left the world of superheroes to be consumed by the pitch blackness of the void. Amaterasu strengthened the radiant sunlight around her body, but it was effortlessly swallowed by the unknown darkness. Only the golden path at their feet resisted the all consuming darkness as it leveled out and travelled farther in a straight line. Other than that, the shifting darkness and wavering blackness around them... it almost seemed alive in a way.

It left his skin crawling.

Joker hesitated as the light of the heroes' world was still at their backs, and began to turn-

"Don't, Trickster." Sandalphon warned with fervor. "We must keep our eyes forward when we travel through here. Always."

"And look not into the endless depths of this void for too long, otherwise you might go mad at its vastness." Hastur's voice slithered in their minds, his wriggling body blending in too well with the unfathomable depths of night, "Or it may pull you in and you'll simply cease to exist. Either is a fate I'd not wish upon you."

"Lovely." Mona deadpanned.

Joker began at a steady jog. Mona's claws clung tightly to him, and Lavenza kept one hand locked in his, the other tightly around the Compendium. Amaterasu floated over the golden path in front of them, Satanael to their left and Sandalphon on their right, with just enough room to not touch the darkness. Hastur reveled at swimming in home territory, but he crept behind as a silent shadow.

"How did Metatron travel through this with all of those Shadows..." Satanael muttered as he covered his face with a hand, "The air in here is becoming thick. It's with any luck we're still alive and breathing within this force of nature."

"No wonder my brother got lost." Sandalphon kept his stern eyes forward, "Without this guiding path, it would be near impossible to traverse."

"And yet it is home to beings such as I." Hastur stated.

"I see something!" Amaterasu slowed after a a few more minutes of running.

They stopped at the circular shoji gate before them, the paper of the door glowed with serene white light. The golden path ended before it.

“This is...” Mona’s voice left in a breathy whisper.

Amaterasu moved aside as Joker approached, his free hand extended, “The gate Oracle and Skull fell into. The ‘Senkaimon,’ as the app calls it.”

The other Personas yet within the mindscape rallied themselves and were prepared to be summoned at a moment’s notice. Mona took a deep breath and let out a long exhale, then nodded at Joker.

“Whenever you’re ready.” Lavenza looked up at the door, shoulders squared.

The door shuddered under Joker’s touch. He shielded his face with his arm when blinding white light poured from the opening Senkaimon. When it was wide enough, they jumped through together.

The next thing he was aware of was an unknown pressure settling on his body, some unknowable sense of power laced in the very air like an invisible ocean. Joker opened his eyes and pressed on with the first step under a square-shaped gate covered in some sort of paper, the dry and dusty ground at his feet staining his shoes. Desolate boulders and smaller cliffs dotted the desert landscape under a painted blue sky and blazing sunlight.

“You’re...?”

Joker looked into the face of an unknown man nearby. The man’s gray eyes were mostly shadowed by the striped bucket hat, but they were wide in bewilderment. He wore a black haori with a white diamond pattern at the bottom, with more traditional styled clothes underneath. He was surrounded by thick cables, computers, and technology stamped with painfully familiar hieroglyphs and symbols straight from Futaba’s Palace, all interconnecting with the paper covered gate and the Senkaimon behind them.

“For real...?”

“Joker... Mona...”

Mona inhaled sharply at the familiar voices. Joker’s heart pounded when he turned, the action slow enough to last a millennia. Other individuals were sprinkled around the barren wasteland, but their eyes latched onto the pale blonde hair of Skull and the vibrant orange of Oracle.

The bubble burst by Skull’s broken, heartfelt cry.

“RENREN!!!”

Emotion clogged Joker’s throat as his legs moved on their own, his vision blurry before the four of them crashed into one another with arms stretched wide.

“Dude, I can’t believe it!!” Skull had tears streaming down his mask, “It’s really you!!”

“Of course it’s us, idiot Skull!” Mona cried as his shining eyes blazed with warmth, “Who else could it be!?”

Skull broke out in a tear-stained grin, “Yep, that’s my MonaMona alright!”

“Shut up!” Mona jumped from Joker’s shoulder and latched onto Skull with his claws, “It’s Morgana! MORGANA! Did you forget me already!?”

“Wha-” Skull wrapped one arm around Mona, the other around Joker’s shoulders in crushing one armed hugs, “We never forgot you! Not once!!”

Mona buried his face in Skull’s chest, “Good!”

The four of them were a sobbing mess of broken voices and wobbly laughter. They continued to touch one another, feeling their living and breathing comrades to make sure that they were real, that this reunion wasn’t some cruel dream whipped up by their extended isolation. While no doubt embarrassing to these complete strangers to watch from afar...

Joker didn't care. And neither did Oracle or Skull.

"How did you get here? The app disappeared from our phones!" Oracle sniffled as she finally let go of Joker, "We... we tried everything and nothing worked!"

"We used the MetaNav!" Mona clambered up Skull's shoulders and jumped into Oracle's arms. "It came back to us!"

"What!?" Skull ripped his phone out of his pocket, "How? We still don't have it."

"We didn't have it either for a long time." Mona sighed as he relaxed into Oracle's grasp, "I couldn't use my powers at all when we first got to that other world Yaldabaoth sent us to. It's a long story."

"Dude, what's with the new threads?" Skull looked Joker up and down, "I almost didn't even recognize you at first."

"And those one, two, three four Personas." Oracle fiddled with her goggles, "Their power levels are off the charts! Wait a sec..." She backed up and oggled Joker, "Your power levels are way off the charts! It's like you evolved. What in the world happened to you?"

Someone cleared their throat, and they turned to the man wearing the bucket hat and black haori. He now covered his face with a white fan, the pale hair spilling from his hat fluttering as he fanned himself.

"Why don't you take this upstairs?" He mused, his calculating gaze shifting from Joker and Mona, "You'll have more privacy and I can offer some refreshments to help you relax!"

"They can use our room, Urahara!" Oracle said, smiling at him.

"Very well." Urahara snapped his fan shut and walked away. "I'll have Tessai start on the tea!"

Joker hesitated, “Lavenza?”

Lavenza stood by the open Senkaimon with the other Personas, but offered him a reassuring smile, “I’ll stay here. Go. Be with your friends for a while.”

“We’ll keep an eye on these strangers.” Satanael said as he looked to the group of people wearing black shihakusho standing around an obscenely long ladder... leading into an opening in the sky. Weird.
“Take as long as you need.”

Joker trailed behind Oracle and Skull as they passed through the group of strangers and climbed up the ladder with familiar ease. The eyes of the black clothed strangers never left him, but one pair in particular drew Joker’s attention.

It was a girl shorter than even Futaba, with a bob of black hair and startling purple eyes. She seemed surprised when they maintained eye contact before Joker passed her. Joker knew by now never to judge people by their size, if Futaba and Manami were anything to go by... and if this strange pressure pressing down on him constantly was a sign of the powers of this world.

They made it to the top of the ladder and into a traditional styled Japanese store front. The entryway was lined wall to wall with buckets and small isles of colorful and decorative candies, and past the windows of the entryway Joker could see the buildings of a city. Joker looked down the ladder to the vastness of the basement, then around to the smaller store front.

“What is this place?” Joker whispered as they were led through a side door.

“I run this humble candy shop during the day,” Urahara said as he whisked his fan out again to shield his face, “But please, make yourselves comfortable!”

“This way!” Skull grinned as he pushed them down another hallway and into the private areas of the shop.

They opened a sliding door into a room lined with tatami. A low table sat in the middle and there were closets on the other wall to store futon. Closed windows let in some dull light.

“So this is where you guys have been staying?” Mona asked, “In a candy shop with a weird basement?”

“Well... not at first.” Skull shoved his hands in his pocket and glared at the floor, “We lived on the streets for a while. This world has a bunch of soul-eating monsters wandering around, so we couldn’t really go out without drawing attention.”

“S-soul-eating monsters?” Mona whispered in morbid curiosity. “Are your Personas okay? You guys didn’t get hurt, right!?”

Oracle and Skull exchanged a look .

“You two got into some trouble too, huh?” Joker said as a mischievous smirk overtook his face.

“Muehehe, you know us so well, Joker!” Oracle stated.

Skull huffed, “Yeah, we’re fine. Er... mostly. Somewhat.”

“It’s not like we changed this world’s course of history! Er... too much.”

“Speak for yourself, Oracle.” Skull shook his head with a sunny grin, “Really, RenRen, it’s nothing Mjolnir and Seiten Taisei couldn’t handle! It was Oracle that kept us out of trouble most of the time.”

“Urahara found us first before it really got bad.” Oracle plopped down at the table with Mona still in her arms, “He totally kicked Skull’s butt without even trying!”

“Hey!” Skull scratched the back of his head and groaned, “The guy is a lot stronger than he looks, alright?”

There was a knock at the door frame and Urahara opened it, “‘This guy’ has tea ready for you!”

Urahara leaned against the door frame and allowed another man to walk through with a tray of tea. He was a larger man, but Joker compared his quiet and gentle demeanor -and that of his well-kept mustache- to Gentle Criminal. Movement caught Joker’s eye to see two children staring at him from the shadow of Urahara’s coat; a shy looking girl and a boy that kept his hard glare unrestrained.

Oracle squeezed Mona, “Thanks, Tessai!”

Mona and Joker exchanged another wild glance as Tessai set out three cups and a dish. Urahara bowed his head and they were finally left in peace. Skull and Oracle dispelled their costumes with a blue flash of fire, so Joker and Mona did the same.

“Oooh! You can change forms whenever you want now!?” Futaba grinned as she ran her hands down Morgana’s back.

“Well, yeah! I couldn’t at the start, and I didn’t even have most of my power when we first got there.” Morgana sniffed at the dish set out for him as Ren finally sat down next to Futaba. Ryuji took the seat next to Ren with a grin, their shoulders touching, “We grew strong enough to where we can change whenever. Ren got a lot stronger.”

“It took a bit, but we regained our powers. Did you find other Persona users in that world?” Ryuji asked. “There were four Personas by the gate! And they didn’t look like Mona’s...”

“Wow, did you finally learn how to count!?” Morgana said with a grin.

“Hey!” Ryuji reached over and button mashed Morgana’s head.

Ren and Futaba smirked at Morgana's cries. The familiarity, the banter...

It set Ren's heart at ease and he almost found himself welling up with tears again.

"To answer your question in the simplest way possible," Ren cleared his throat and Ryuji pulled his arm back, "I went from holding the Fool Arcana to the World Arcana, so Futaba was right to say that I... evolved. And all of those Personas are mine."

Futaba and Ryuji's jaws dropped.

"I didn't even know you could ever summon more than one at once!" Futaba cried.

Ryuji nudged Ren on the shoulder, "What kind of-"

Ryuji suddenly snapped his jaw shut when Futaba held up her hand.

"What is it?" Morgana asked.

Futaba looked up into the rafters with a playful glare, "Yoruichi! It's rude to eavesdrop!"

Ren and Morgana jumped back as a black cat with golden eyes dropped onto the table, as light as a feather. It didn't disturb the delicate cups nor spill a drop of tea.

"You know what they say about cats and curiosity, Futaba-chan." The cat spoke in a deep male voice quite the opposite of Morgana's, bordering on silky and regal, "But I'll respect your wish for privacy. Oh," The cat looked at Morgana and winked, "I recommended the wine in that bowl for you. It's made especially for cats. Enjoy."

The cat sauntered out, the tip of his tail bobbing. It even closed the door for them.

Morgana blinked slowly, then inhaled, "This world has talking cats, too!?"

Ryuji sighed, "It feels nostalgic to say this, but dude... that's not a cat."

"Seriously!?"

"Seriously." Futaba nodded, "She's actually a really cool ninja lady! She was with Urahara when he approached us, and the first time she showed us she could turn into a cat and back into a person-"

"No! I don't want to remember that again!" Ryuji shouted as his ears turned scarlet, "Just... no."

"Fiiiine." Futaba reached for her tea and took a big gulp, "But Ryuji couldn't look at her for a week without blushing! It was funny."

"Moving on..." Ryuji muttered as he looked at Ren, "I was going to ask what kind of world you guys were in before the she-cat interrupted."

Ren smirked as he grabbed his teacup, "You're not going to believe it."

Futaba leaned forward, eyes shimmering, "This world has invisible soul eating monsters and a secret society of dead spirit people who fight them! Throw it at us, Ren!"

"We were sent to a comic book world full of superheroes where... mostly everyone has some sort of power that they call 'Quirks.'"

"FOR REAL!?" Ryuji slammed a fist on the table.

"Ryuji!" Futaba puffed her cheeks at him, "You don't need to be so loud."

"Sorry! But seriously, superheroes !? Like... the capes and flashy costumes and everything? People can fly or shoot lasers out of their eyes!? Do they call out their super-powered attack moves like they do in anime!? They kinda do that here too, but this is different!”

“Pretty much.” Morgana took a drink from the saucer, and eagerly licked his lips before he continued, “It wasn’t all that glamorous though. We landed right in the middle of a villain attack, the heroes and police thought we were part of it and managed to arrest us!”

“No way.” Futaba paled. “What happened then?”

Morgana snickered, “Naturally, we escaped.”

“Hell yeah!” Ryuji clapped Ren on the back, “That’s our Leader!”

“Hey! I helped out!” Morgana snapped.

“Really?” Ryuji poked Morgana’s nose, “How did you help when you didn’t have your powers at the start?”

“With my wits and craftiness, of course! I snuck out through the vents to get our Metaverse items back, then used a smoke bomb in the room Joker was in!”

Ryuji squinted, “I don’t buy it.”

“You-!!”

“He’s telling the truth.” Ren smiled at Morgana, “I doubt I would’ve escaped if Morgana wasn’t there. And since then... well, a lot has happened. We helped people as Phantom Thieves, but there were a lot of horrible things you wouldn’t want to put your worst enemy through.”

“Well, Ren... you got the worst of it out of the two of us.”

Futaba stilled, “Why’s that?”

“Because he-”

“Morgana.”

“Don’t you think they should know?”

Ren looked between Ryuji and Futaba as they grew concerned, “... Let’s wait until we have everyone, first.”

“Was it...” Futaba’s voice shook, “Can you at least tell us if it was as bad as that day in November?”

Ren’s mouth went dry. He downed the rest of his tea before he answered, “It was worse.”

Futaba buried her face in Morgana’s fur, shoulders trembling.

“So a lot of bad shit happened to you guys?” Ryuji glowered at the table, Futaba reached out and grabbed his sleeve. “Yeah, we’ve seen a lot of awful shit here, too.” Ryuji smiled, and Ren was surprised to see how tired Ryuji looked, but despite everything he remained hopeful, “But there are good people here who helped us get through it. The important thing is that we’re together again!”

“Any word on the others?” Futaba whispered as she looked up.

“No.” Morgana’s ears drooped, “Once we got the app back, I suggested we find you two first because of your Persona, Futaba. It took us a long time just to guess the Keywords to this world. Do you think you could do something to speed up the process?”

Futaba hummed, “I could try something through Prometheus. What’s the plan, Leader? Are we doing this here, or...?”

The three of them looked to Ren, who sat up straighter.

“I’d like for us to have the superhero world serve as our base of operations. We’ll gain access to the other worlds and reunite with the others from there. After that... I guess we’ll see what we can do to prepare for the final battle against Yaldabaoth.”

“That’s a sound plan!” Morgana chirped.

“Welp.” Ryuji stood up and held out his hand to Ren with an ear to ear grin, “We better get started, right Leader? The others are waitin’ for us!”

Ren smirked as he took Ryuji’s hand and stood next to his best friend, “Let’s do this.”

“Hell yeah! That’s my RenRen!”

The four of them donned their Phantom Thief attire in unison. Oracle and Skull took them back down into the desert basement where the inhabitants of this world waited, many studying the Personas waiting patiently by the Senkaimon. The man named Urahara spoke with Lavenza herself. Though Joker was too far to hear what they were saying, Lavenza must’ve said something as Urahara tapped the fan on his chin in intense thought.

“So... is this it?” The girl with the black hair and purple eyes asked. “Do you want to wait for Orihime or Chad to get here? There’s no doubt Ishida sensed...” The girl looked at Joker before her eyes returned to Oracle. “... this, too.”

“We’re still in the planning stages yet,” Joker stated softly, “So this isn’t goodbye. Still, we shouldn’t linger here too long.”

“Like he said, Rukia-chan.” Oracle bore a shaky smile. “There’s still lots to do.”

Skull walked up to a pair of men and spoke to them fondly, almost like brothers. The first had orange hair as vibrant as Oracle’s and a massive sword on his back, the other had tribal tattoos and crimson hair tied up in a wild ponytail.

“Hey, you.” Joker paused as Rukia crossed her arms and looked up at him, her amethyst eyes as sharp as the katana at her hip. They started at each other for an entire minute, neither breaking eye contact, until Rukia relaxed and bore a soft grin, “I like you. You’re more than worthy to be Futaba-chan’s older brother.”

“R-Rukia-chan!” Oracle waved her hands wildly, “You can’t just say something like that!”

Rukia was unabashed, “Why not?”

Oracle sputtered as her face began to turn red.

“We’ll give you a few minutes.” Joker told Oracle with an amused smirk, “Mona and I will wait by the gate.”

“... Okay.” Oracle deflated. “Thanks, Joker.”

Joker and Mona approached the Senkaimon and waited by his Personas. Something stirred in Joker’s chest as he watched the orange-haired man lay a firm and reassuring hand on Skull’s shoulder, or how Rukia grinned wide and gave Oracle a horribly butchered child’s drawing of a rabbit.

It reminded him of Aizawa, Hitoshi, Midoriya, and so many others back in the superhero world. Not only had he and Mona forged strong bonds there, but Oracle and Skull found themselves surrounded by equal friends and allies in this world, too.

... And that more people across these worlds will have to say goodbye to someone they grew to care for.

Yaldabaoth’s cruelty deepened in a way Joker never expected it to.

Urahara glanced between Joker’s wistful expression, and then Oracle and Skull.

“You’re not jealous?” Urahara asked, tone carefully neutral.

Joker blinked at Urahara, “Why would I be jealous?”

“You know, complete strangers stealing the affection of your friends after such a long time being apart?”

“I’m not that shallow.” Joker chuckled dryly, but then he frowned in contemplation. “Actually, I’m glad Oracle and Skull found people like them.”

The glint in Urahara’s eyes sharpened, “Oh?”

“It means they had the support necessary so they could hold onto their hope of reuniting with us one day.” Joker looked at Urahara, who studied him with a keen intelligence that could easily rival Nezu’s, “And they told me you took them in.” Joker bowed his head, “Thank you for keeping them safe.”

Urahara hummed and whipped out his fan to cover his face again, “They told me a lot about you, Joker, and I have to say I’m not disappointed.” He closed his fan with a snap, revealing the shamelessly excited grin on his face, “That’s why I’m coming with you!”

Mona whipped towards Urahara, “Huh!?”

“You are?” Joker asked, eyes wide.

“I am somewhat of an expert when it comes to traversing different planes of existence.” Urahara looked to the Senkaimon with another calculating glint in his eyes, “But the thought of going to entirely separate worlds where no such things exist? This is a once in a life time chance, even for someone like myself who’s been around for a few centuries. Also, I’d like to aid Oracle and Skull in getting back home. They’ve told me what Yaldabaoth put them through, what they put you through. How could I not help after that?”

Joker’s eyes widened.

He learned how to first read stoic people from Sojiro, and the past several months with Aizawa honed that ability to a razor sharp point.

The man Joker looked at now hid his true intentions with playful grins and banter, but Joker sensed something... fiercely protective underneath it all.

He smiled under Joker's silence, "Unless, of course, you think you could do without the help?"

"No. It would be much appreciated." Joker said with a firm nod.

"Then I'm coming along, too."

Joker and Mona flinched. Yoruichi sat primly on one of the nearby boulders, cleaning her paw. The ninja-cat-woman could teach Joker a thing or two about being stealthy.

"Really, Yoruichi?" Urahara waved his fan at her like a petulant child, "I can handle this myself!"

"Please. I know you too well, Kisuke." The feline rolled her eyes, "Your boundless curiosity would distract you. I'm going along to make sure you stay focused."

Urahara's shoulders dropped in a pout, "Fine."

Yoruichi turned her eyes to Mona. "Did you like that wine?"

"Y-Yes, it was delicious! Thank you for sharing that!"

Yoruichi tilted her head in amusement, "Think nothing of it."

"Yo, we're ready to go." Skull approached with Oracle, the other people of this world stood back and watched on with anticipation.

"Wait, you're going with, Hat'n'Clogs?" The orange haired man narrowed his eyes, "And you too, Yoruichi?"

"Yes, Kurosaki." Yoruichi leveled Kurosaki with amusement, "Right now, we need thinkers and planners, not brute force."

“She’s right.” Oracle smiled at Kurosaki, “But we might need your strength yet! So... stay here and wait for us? Or for Urahara and Yoruichi to come back and give an update on everything?”

“Fine.” Kurosaki scowled, then stared into Joker’s eyes with more of that protective fierceness he sensed in Urahara, “We’ll be waiting to help out.”

Joker firmly nodded before he turned towards the Senkaimon.

“So, we just have to walk through this thing to get to that other world?” Skull asked, “It won’t lead... elsewhere?”

“That is correct, Chariot.” Lavenza said, “But once we go through, we must stick together until we reach our destination.”

“Gotcha! No problems there!”

“Jinta, Ururu, Tessai, hold down the shop while I’m gone!” Urahara waved his fan towards the ladder where the others in his shop waited, “As for the rest of you... please don’t break anything or I’ll make you pay for it.”

They jumped from the light and into the blackness. Joker’s Personas surrounded them as Skull, Oracle, Urahara, and Yoruichi looked around.

Yoruichi’s fur bristled, “This is similar to the Dangai, but... not.”

“Let’s not hesitate.” Amaterasu moved forward first, “Staying here too long is dangerous.”

“Of course.” Urahara stated as they began their way over the golden path. “By the way, what is your name, miss? I know Oracle and Skull’s Personas have pretty prominent names of deities, so I’m curious.”

“I am Amaterasu.”

“Amaterasu !?” Oracle gaped, “She wasn’t in your Compendium before, Joker!”

“Er, the wriggling black tentacle thing wasn’t.” Skull commented before he stared at Satanael. “I don’t remember you either! But your getup looks a lot like Joker’s new costume...”

“Joker faced many trials and tribulations since we were separated from you.” Satanael said serenely, “New strengths and weaknesses were born within the Sea of this other world, providing a number of changes to Joker’s soul. For example, you know my previous incarnation as Arsene.”

Urahara hummed as he gave Joker a curious glance, then turned his eyes to study Oracle and Skull.

“You’re Arsene!?” Skull gaped.

“Satanael was supposed to be the one who ended it back then.” Joker stated solemnly, “If I didn’t hesitate that time... none of this would’ve ever happened.”

“Joker...” Mona whispered.

“Dude, we don’t blame you for that cheap shot Yaldabaoth pulled.” Skull said.

“Not one bit!” Oracle cried as she waved her arms, “So you better not blame yourself either, mister!”

“You guys...” Joker smiled as an ancient knot of guilt in his chest began to unravel, “Thank you.”

Urahara and Yoruichi stayed quiet, but traded guarded glances. The rest of the trip was spent in silence until they reached the other side. They descended the golden stairs, emerged from the darkness, and into the USJ. Joker and Mona could feel Oracle and Skull gaping as they took in the vastness of the facility.

But something was wrong.

The teachers and vigilantes were gone, and bright sunlight shone through the ceiling instead of the darkness of night time. A familiar white mammal sat upon the rim of the fountain, looking up from his book with a relieved smile.

“Joker!!!”

Joker barely had time to react before Hawks crashed into him from the sky. Sandalphon shot forward and rescued Joker from falling on his ass. He regained his balance and blinked at the mass of red feathers wrapping around him.

“Hawks?” Joker blinked rapidly as Hawks let him go, others in Joker’s hero group rushed towards them.

“About time you came back!” Miruko shouted, teary eyed, “We were this close to charging in there ourselves!!”

Gang Orca put a hand over his heart, “I’m glad you’re both safe. Thank goodness.”

“Um...” Mona blinked rapidly as they were given space, “What in the heck is going on? Why such a loud welcome when we were barely gone for an hour?”

They were met with startled shock.

“My, my. An hour, you say?” Nezu made his way to the head of the group, “For us, it’s been two and a half days.”

“Two and a half days ?” Joker reiterated in shock.

“Indeed.” Nezu clapped his paws together, “We put the security around the school on high alert when you didn’t come back by the first morning, but the heroes and their assistants resumed teaching their classes as to not draw suspicion from the students. The others in your hero group split into two teams to cover them while classes are in order, so Best Jeanist, Tensei, and Ryukyu are resting at the dorms from their shift.”

“I still can’t believe we were gone that long...” Mona muttered.

“Joker... Joker... ” Oracle tugged on Joker’s sleeve as she stared down at Nezu, “There’s a talking mouse!”

“It kinda reminds me of when we were all turned into mice in Shido’s Palace!” Skull stated.

“I’m sorry, what ?” Hawks asked as he took a bewildered step back. “You were turned into mice!?”

Nezu gave Joker a look, “You conveniently left that part out of your explanations.”

Mona sputtered, “I-It was embarrassing! Plus, there were so many other more important things we had to cover and worry about!” He gave a pointed look to Oracle and Skull, “Like... reuniting with our teammates .”

“Ah, forgive our rudeness! I suppose proper introductions are in order!” Nezu grinned at Oracle and Skull, “Am I a mouse? A dog? A bear? No, I am the Principal of U.A.! The top heroics school in all of Japan!”

Hawks winked, “I’m Hawks, the new Number One hero in Japan!”

Gang Orca bowed his head, “It’s nice to finally meet the teammates that Joker and Mona hold to such high regard. My hero name is Gang Orca, it’s a pleasure.”

Miruko grinned, “I’m Miruko! Honorary big sister to Joker and Mona!”

“Woah...” Skull looked between all of them, “So Joker told us this was a world full of superheroes, so are those animal parts pieces of your costume, or...?”

Mona facepalmed, “Skull...”

Gang Orca grinned to show his massive teeth, “Afraid not. We were born like this.”

“These babies aren’t coming off!” Miruko cackled as she tugged on her rabbit ears.

Hawks rolled his shoulders and flexed his crimson wings, “What they said.”

Skull looked like he was about to implode, “This is so cool.”

“Skull, don’t be rude!” Oracle whispered to him before she faced the group, fidgeting when so many eyes were on her, but she kept herself steady, “Um... I’m Oracle, the navigator of the Phantom Thieves.”

“And I’m Skull, Joker’s right hand man! Nice to meet ya!”

“Joker,” Oracle turned to him with a smile “I can start working on the app!”

“Oh.” He reached into his pocket and handed his phone to her, “Don’t feel like you need to rush, okay?”

“Kay!”

She took it and approached the rift again. Many gasps escaped the heroes as she summoned Prometheus around her and floated over them to begin her work.

“Don’t mind her.” Skull said as he smiled at Prometheus, “She’s still a bit shy around new people.”

Nezu hummed, before he looked to the other pair who hadn’t yet introduced themselves, “And who might you be? We were aware of Oracle and Skull, but I was not expecting more guests beyond that.”

“We apologize. We’re natural inhabitants of the world Oracle and Skull were trapped in.” Yoruichi stated with a respectful nod, “You can call me Yoruichi.”

“Urahara Kisuke.” Urahara grinned as he waved his white fan at Nezu, “I can already tell the stark differences between our worlds. How fascinating. How exciting!”

“Like what?” Nezu asked, ears forward.

“There’s no reishi. None at all.” Urahara frowned at the confused looks, “Think of it as the base energy in the environment that all souls in my home world need to survive.”

“I never really understood that part.” Skull muttered to himself.

Joker frowned.

That odd pressure he felt in the other world wasn’t present here, but something... different. Powers hidden underneath the veil of souls just under the surface of this world, but such a drastic change in environments...

He didn’t want to think what happens to deep sea fish coming up to the surface.

“Will you two be okay without it?” Joker asked as he turned to Urahara and Yoruichi, “I didn’t even think about it.”

The odd pair stilled, stared at each other with growing hints of amusement, before returning their gazes to him with hints of approval.

“We’ll be fine, for a time.” Yoruichi said.

Urahara nodded, “We have our own internal stores we can draw from, so you don’t need to worry about us!”

“Oh?” Nezu’s eyes sparkled, “Care to explain in more detail over a cup of tea? I am also eager to learn what differences this world has to yours!”

Urahara smiled, “It would be my pleasure. We came to offer our assistance in any way we can, so it would be good to exchange vital information between one another.”

Yoruichi sighed as she climbed on Urahara’s head and splayed herself out over his hat. Nezu led them over to the fountain, where a small table and cushions were laid out. And there was already a tea set waiting. Joker wondered how long it had been there.

Joker looked to the other heroes. “When did you guys get here?”

Miruko frowned, “A few hours after you went through the rift.”

“We’ll message the others about your successful return, but they might not answer for a while.” Hawks checked a watch on his wrist, “Considering it’s 10:30 in the morning.”

“We didn’t think something like that would happen.” Mona shook his head, “We’re sorry.”

“You don’t need to apologize. It’s not like it was on purpose.” Gang Orca smiled in his usual soft and warm manner, “Now we can prepare accordingly.”

Skull beamed, “You made some pretty good friends in this world too, Leader?”

Joker smiled fondly, “Yeah.”

Skull turned fully towards the group with his sunny grin, “Thanks for takin’ care of them. They mean a lot to me an’ Oracle!”

“Really, it’s more like the other way around.” Miruko said with a smirk.

"I wouldn't be the person I am today if it weren't for them." Hawks stated.

"I would say it's an equal trade." Gang Orca grinned, "They helped us out, and we helped them in their time of need. This world is in a much better state, thanks to his and Mona's efforts."

Joker felt his face heat up, "It's nothing, really."

"Hey!" They all looked up at Oracle's voice, "I got another connection!"

"Already!?" Mona cried, "Well, it was a good call to get to Oracle and Skull first after all..."

Prometheus lowered to the ground. Joker, Mona, and Skull rushed to her as her Persona vanished in a small whirlwind of blue ash.

"Muehehehe..." Oracle smirked, "Joker, you might've gained the most power out of all of us, but you're not the only one that got stronger! Skull and I got a lot better, too!"

"I believe it." Mona had a fond smile. "Which world did you connect to?"

Oracle held out the phone to Joker, "I got Fox and Queen. Door: Monolith. Core: Truth. Location: City."

Mona winced, "Easier words than what was used to connect to the world you were in."

Joker took his phone from Oracle, "Let's go get them."

"Wait, Joker." Oracle poked her fingers together, "I think... I'll stay here."

"Why?" Joker asked, eyes wide.

“I can use Prometheus to get us all sorts of data as you cross through the rift! Maybe I can find a way so that it won’t take you days to return, e-even if you’re on the other side for a longer period of time.”

“I agree with the little lady. Being gone for two and a half days is lucky, considering time runs differently between worlds. Some people could be gone for months or years if they don’t know what they’re doing.” Urahara said from where he sat across from Nezu with a steaming cup of tea in hand, “I can help in gathering data, Oracle, as we did before. Who knows what helpful bits we can use for the final battle itself?”

“Of course, I’ll use what I have to help as well!” Nezu said with a grin.

Mona nodded, “Then leave the infiltration to us!”

Skull looked torn between staying with Oracle or going with Joker to get the rest of their friends, so Joker grasped his shoulder to give him some courage, “Can you stay and look after Oracle? We don’t want her to be alone.”

Skull’s shoulder sank in relief, “Right! You guys be careful, ‘kay?”

“It’s a promise.” Mona turned towards the rift.

Joker looked at Nezu, but the rat smiled, “We’ll take great care of our honored guests! You don’t need to worry.”

Joker nodded, then followed Mona to the rift.

Lavenza made to go to them, but Theodore held out a hand.
“Brother?”

“Pardon my sudden request,” Theodore stated, staring at Joker and Mona, “But may I go along this time?”

“Why?” Joker asked.

“I believe it would be good for Lavenza to take a rest, and I am curious to see this other world for myself.”

“Hmm, good point.” Margaret smiled serenely, “I’ll offer to go to the third and final world after, should we find the Keywords for it.”

“Hey!” Elizabeth glared at her siblings, “What about me?”

“You should stay here. After all, we’re on the front line should something hostile come through. You’re the best choice to stay and defend this world.”

Elizabeth squinted between Theodore and Margaret, “Whatever.”

“I’ll choose new Personas, too.” Joker stated. Satanael and the others bowed deeply before they disappeared, and Joker chose the next group to accompany them in reality, “Futsunushi. Odin. Cybele. Fafnir.”

The Personas rose around him, much to the astounded gasps of Skull and Oracle.

Joker looked down at his phone when they were ready, standing at the foot of the golden stairs, “I’m going to disconnect from Urahara’s world, and then connect to Fox and Queen’s world.”

“Right!” Oracle summoned Prometheus around her and floated above the fountain again, “Ready to collect data, Joker!”

The golden stairs shattered like pieces of stained glass. Joker gaped as the shards hovered in the air, reflecting the sunlight streaming in from above, only to reform exactly as they were moments ago.

“Weird.” Mona poked at the stairs with a paw, “Are we sure this worked?”

“It says it did.” Joker stuffed his phone back in his pocket, “There’s only one way to find out.”

Joker climbed the stairs, with his Personas, Theodore, and Mona at his heels. They entered the pitch black nothingness without so much as a look backwards, despite the anxiety coating the stares at their backs.

“This is...” Theodore whispered, “Astounding.”

“Have you ever seen something like this, Theodore?” Mona asked.

“No.” Theodore looked to the golden path at their feet, “We broke through this space when we went to you, but we stayed within the Velvet Room for that time. Seeing this puts it into better perspective.”

“This is no time for idle chatter.” Odin stated, “We must move!”

“Oh, be patient, will you?” Cybele smirked.

“No, Odin is correct.” Futsunushi’s swords twirled around him, “Besides, look at that. It’s a different path compared to last time.”

The golden path, instead of going straight ahead, turned sharply to their right, and in the distance they could see it spiral downwards like a glowing corkscrew trapped in ink.

They began at a steady pace, Joker and Mona’s colorful footprints splashing across the gold. It didn’t take them long to reach the downward spiral, the smooth path reforming into countless stairs.

“Is it me, or does this one feel longer?” Joker said after their tenth or so turn, “This is starting to make me dizzy.”

“Then why not ride me for a quicker trip?” Fafnir snapped. “Or the Magician can turn into a bus!”

“It’s better to go slow and steady in such a space.” Odin frowned as he peered over the side of the spiral, “We cannot risk rushing and accidentally falling off.”

“Hastur said it would erase us from existence if it pulled us in,” Mona shivered, “We can’t go disappearing when our friends are counting on us!”

“It appears we’re near the end anyway.” Theodore pointed to the next spiral, which leveled out like a ramp, “It looks like there’s a door there.”

Joker swiftly climbed down the remaining stairs and they reached a tall monolithic set of doors carved with numerous symbols and glyphs.

Joker reached his hand out, but paused, “Do you feel that?”

“Yeah.” Mona glared at the door, “It’s giving off a bad vibe. Like... like there’s electricity crawling all over my skin.”

They readied themselves as Joker touched the Door, the material shot an ice cold tremor through his glove and up his arm. A wave of static energy pulled through the space as Joker took his hand back, and the Door began to swing open on ancient stone hinges.

Unlike the Senkaimon, this door revealed an inky blackness no different to the void around them. The golden path ended at its precipice, as if afraid to go further.

Mona looked at him, “Joker, I don’t like this one bi-”

A giant eye snapped open vertically in the darkness, and a hundred shadowy arms were upon them before they could blink. Joker heard Mona’s startled shout and Theodore’s cry of rage, and he was yanked into the door before he could so much as cast a spell.

Joker stumbled at the sudden disappearance of the arms, opening his eyes to a stark white... everything. He looked around and took a step forward, colors splashing against the milky floor.

“Mona? Theodore?” Joker’s heart pounded when he reached for his Personas only to find his mind as blank as the space around him.
“Anyone?”

“Well, look at you. You finally made it.”

He whirled around to the voice. A being sat nearby, its entirely white body only visible from the writhing shadows around its outline. It had no eyes or nose, though its too wide smile revealed many teeth. Joker’s hair stood on end because the being’s shape... the general outline... it looked too much like Joker himself.

Joker activated Third Eye. His vision exploded into red. The entirety of the white space turned crimson from the being’s aura, something he’d recently seen, just once, in the world of superheroes from Ryoto.

Joker’s hand went to Paradise Lost, “What are you? Where am I?”

The being laughed as if this entire thing was an amusing play. Its voice trilled in many timbres, ranging from the high and light voice of a woman to the deep baritone of a man. Joker’s stomach roiled when the combined voices sounded far too similar to those of his Personas.

“I am called many names. God. The World. The Universe. The All and the One. But you may call me Truth.”

Joker’s eyes widened as he recalled Igor’s words.

“ Humanity has always been watched by forces outside of our comprehension. Our situation may have drawn special interest from such beings, as well. Perhaps they are watching right now, waiting to see how this war between you and Yaldabaoth ends.”

Truth had the same aura as Ryoto.

So does that mean that the man who raised Hawks, the person who hadn't aged a single day in years, the only singular being who held the same aura like this entity before him... could be the superhero world's equivalent to God ?

The man had peered strangely at Joker before they left the Kyoto hospital and whispered 'Good luck.'. He didn't think much of it at the time. Brushed it off and forgot about it, even. He thought it was meant for Kaito, but thinking now... if Ryoto was something like the being that sat before him, then it put those few whispered words in an entirely new light.

"Although, I didn't think you'd grow to be strong enough to be a God in your own right."

"Don't be ridiculous." Joker scoffed, "I'm not a god."

Truth tilted their head, "Are you sure?"

It held up its left hand, and a blue flame roiled to life in its palm. Within the blue flames appeared a white and black domino mask. Joker stilled as the being raised its right palm in a similar manner, and within the blue flame appeared his current black and gold mask.

"You have grown to be an entire World." Truth crossed their palms into an X shape, and the balls of flame combined, the pieces of the masks swirling together within the fire, "But you still have the potential to evolve into something more. Do you think just any normal human could travel this extended road without their minds breaking? Could just traipse through forbidden spaces without any trouble? Being so far from home, separated from the ones you care so deeply for... a lesser human would've snapped and lost his mind by now. Without such a strong willpower like yours, nobody else would even stand a chance against the new powers Yaldabaoth possesses."

Joker shook his head, "How do you know all of this?"

“Have you not figured it out?” Truth tilted their head as the flames sputtered out, their smile encompassing the entirety of their lower face, “I am thou, thou art I.”

Paradise Lost was unsheathed in a singing arc of black and silver. Joker scowled as he fell into a battle stance, “Enough fooling around! What did you do to Mona and Theodore? Where are Fox and Queen?”

“I did nothing to them. The Magician, Attendant, and your other selves are unharmed, and the Emperor and High Priestess have been waiting so long for you. However, before I send you along your merry way for another happy reunion,” Truth slowly tilted their head the other way, “I’d like to strike a deal with you.”

“Why would I do that?” Joker dangerously narrowed his eyes, “I’ve said no to Yaldabaoth and All For One. I can say no to you, too.”

“I don’t think you can.”

“And why’s that?”

“Because I can keep you here for as long as I like.” Joker grimaced as Truth laughed again. Joker reached for the Key over his heart, but the being shook his head, “That won’t work here. Not in my realm as long as I don’t allow it. Time will be practically frozen in the other worlds, but years will pass here. How many millennia will it take for a butterfly to flap its wings only once? How long will that precious will power of yours last before it crumbles away to dust and ash?”

“What do you want, then?” Joker growled.

“Simply to make sure that what’s mine stays mine.”

“You’re making no sense. Care to elaborate?”

“Alchemy.” The creepy smile faded from Truth’s face until it was a blank white mask. “The force of nature in my world belongs only to my world. It'll be dangerous for the High Priestess and Emperor to return to their home world with such forbidden knowledge at their fingertips."

Joker raised a brow as he slowly stood from his combat stance, "So?"

Truth held out their hand. "I wish to take that knowledge back when the boundaries between worlds are restored."

"Wouldn't tampering with their memories would hurt them?" Joker scowled. "I couldn't do that."

Truth chuckled at Joker's darkening expression, "I'll make it painless, like forgetting a dream once you wake. They'll still remember the bonds they forged, but anything they learned of Alchemy itself must be forgotten."

"You know, we both lose if I say no."

"Then you better take my deal if you want to win."

Joker's lips pursed. His grip tightened over Paradise Lost, the blade reflecting the creamy whiteness of this realm.

After another moment of defiant silence, Truth sighed like a disappointed parent, "I'll be generous and sweeten it for you, since this entire situation wasn't your fault. I can reveal the location to where the Emperor and High Priestess have been residing. Get in. Get out . Kill that fool of a Holy Grail and heal what has been broken. Everything will return to normal and balance will be restored. It's that simple, no? All for the price of something they never would've learned in the first place."

He couldn't summon his Personas, nor use their magic in this alien place. He wouldn't be fast enough to test his Key before Truth did who knows what in retaliation, and he didn't want to push the theory on if Truth could trap him here or not. Joker didn't know what this... god like being was capable of within the confines of their own realm.

Joker sighed as he sheathed his dagger, "Fine. But if it does end up hurting them, then nothing will stop me from finding a way to come back here to kill you myself."

"Good. I wouldn't expect anything less from the Trickster." Truth snapped their fingers, and static crawled up Joker's back, "Go through the door behind you to reunite with the Magician and Attendant. You'll know what to do from there."

Joker looked over his shoulder to another monolithic set of doors, which already cracked open to reveal the blackness within. He turned around and approached it, and only took one step inside before Truth spoke again.

"One more thing."

"What?" Joker grumbled.

"If a man named Philemon ever approaches you, make sure to punch him as hard as you can. I don't think he learned his lesson the first time."

"Why would I do that?"

"Because he's the idiot who put us all in this very precarious position in the first place."

"Wha-"

Joker could say no more as the darkness within the door swallowed him. He stumbled forward again, gloved hands landing roughly on the sharp gravel of a damp rooftop. The sound of raindrops and the aroma of wet stones surrounded them like a thick blanket. He gasped at the lance of sharp pain in his head, the electricity laced in the very bones of this world singing softly to him.

“Joker, are you okay!?” Mona was at his side, tiny arms waving.

“Yeah, I’m fine.” He grasped his head when it felt as if someone pushed a long, thin needle into his temple, but the pain was fading, “How long was I gone?”

“What? You didn’t go anywhere! We got here a second ago and you just collapsed!”

“But your Personas disappeared when we did.” Theodore crouched on his other side, studying Joker’s pale face with a frown, “Are you certain you’re alright?”

“... Yeah.” He stood up and wiped wet gravel from his pants.

“What happened?” Satanael and the others hovered around the mindscape, scowling at the tiny addition to Joker’s mind, “We felt something strange for a moment... and then you were back with us. What caused that pain?”

“I think I made a deal with this world’s god?”

Alarm shot through the mindscape and their focus turned hostile at the new sensation in Joker’s mind.

“It’s fine! I dealt with it, so you don’t have to worry about anything. I promise.”

Satanael didn’t seem to believe him, but he and the others acquiesced. “... Alright.”

“Where are we?” Mona looked out across a rainy city, “How in the world are we supposed to find Fox and Queen in a huge place like this!?”

“It would be unwise to cause a big scene in an attempt to attract them.” Theodore clutched his chin as he scanned the unfamiliar cityscape, “Especially since the Door vanished behind us.”

“Maybe Oracle and Skull should’ve come with us after all.” Mona said, wincing.

Joker looked behind them. There was a faint outline of a door with strange symbols, but to anyone it looked like a random chalk drawing on a flat wall.

“It’ll come back when we’re ready to leave.”

“How do you know that?” Mona asked.

“I just... do.” Joker groaned as he scratched his aching temple, “I also know where Fox and Queen’s apartment is.”

“What!?” Mona scrambled up Joker’s shoulder, “How could you possibly know!?”

Joker grimaced, “You’ll just have to trust me, okay?”

Mona’s eyes pierced through him, but he sighed, “Okay. If you know where they are, then let’s stop wasting time!”

“But we must not draw any attention to ourselves. Who knows what this world’s inhabitants can do with whatever magic lays in their world.” Theodore stated. “They may not take well to strangers like us.”

A sour taste laced Joker’s tongue. “They’re not far.”

They traversed the old fashioned, yet somehow new, rooftops. They kept to the shadows, easily hiding themselves on the dreary, rainy, and cool environs of a city that would be at home in the early 1900’s, made of all stone and mortar and the creeping scent of motor exhaust. The clothes and vehicles could belong in a history museum. The little needle in Joker’s mind supplemented that this city’s name was Amestris, but aside from the steep tug towards a certain direction, it offered nothing else.

Wide streets turned into countless rivulets of tiny nooks and alleyways. This city must've been in a constant drizzle, as trickles of water washed over the stones and mixed with the none-too-pleasant smell of human waste and other garbage.

Poor Mona wrinkled his nose at it.

Theodore looked a little green, but didn't complain.

They crossed over a few more tiny alleyways when Joker dropped down. Just a few steps away, hidden within this tiny alley and a stack of crates to keep it out of view from the bigger street, lay a wooden door.

Mona and Theodore watched as he approached and tried its handle. He put his ear to it and listened.

"Nobody's home and its locked." Joker smirked as he whipped out his Perma-Pick, "But nothing I can't handle."

"Joker, are you sure this is it?" Mona asked.

"Positive." He grinned as the lock clicked open. He tucked away his lockpick and opened the door, a pair of confused comrades following in his wake when he entered.

It was a small space, barely a handful of rooms cramped together.

Mona's eyes were as wide as dinner plates as they looked around the walls plastered with notes of strange glyphs and symbols. Joker frowned as he looked at the intricate circles all around them.

This must be the 'Alchemy' Truth spoke of.

He was careful not to look too hard at any of it.

Empty ceramic cups with the strong scent of coffee and old paper were littered everywhere, along with more books piled in the corners and along any extra wall space that would make any book-lover cry with tears of joy.

Mona jumped on the crowded table and opened a leather journal at the top of the pile.

“This looks to be notes on something called ‘Alchemy.’ Wait, this neat handwriting!” Mona’s eyes welled with tears, “These were written by Queen... and these confusing circles everywhere... I’d recognize Fox’s brushstrokes anywhere!” He whirled around to Joker, “This really is where they must’ve stayed!”

“But how can we be so sure they’ll return?” Theodore froze after he spoke, and then he faced the door with his Compendium flying open.

Just then, they heard the jingle of keys outside.

“Yusuke, did you forget to lock it again?”

Mona and Joker froze at Makoto’s voice.

“No... it was your duty to lock it when we left. I swear you did though...”

“You guys can’t keep track of who locks your own damn door?” A new voice said, annoyed and young.

The door swung open and familiar figures stepped inside, but they froze like deer in the headlights at the scene before them. Makoto wore some sort of blue military uniform, while Yusuke donned a disheveled Victorian styles suit without the jacket. Their faces drained of color, and the paper bag full of groceries dropped from Makoto’s arms.

Makoto’s hands flew to her mouth, “... Joker? Mona?”

Hearing her voice sparked something warm and wet in Joker’s eyes, too. With a teary grin, he held out his arms.

“We’re here.” Joker said, his voice cracking.

Makoto rushed into his arms, and Yusuke didn’t wait. Mona jumped in with snuffles and more tears falling onto the floor.

Yusuke’s arms were trembling, “This is... this isn’t another dream, is it?”

“You had dreams about this?” Mona babbled.

“Of course! Every night since we got here.” Yusuke chuckled wetly as he reluctantly pulled away, Mona huddled in his arms, “Although, I never thought to see you in such a new and stylish costume, Joker. Gold really suits you. Perhaps, if you could be my next muse-”

“You’re going on about art now of all times!?” Mona yelped.

Joker chuckled as he blinked rapidly to clear the tears, “It wouldn’t be our Fox without it, Mona.”

“How ?” Makoto pulled back, hands resting on Joker’s chest, “How are you here?”

Joker placed his hand over hers, “We can explain everything later. Right now, the both of you need to come with us.” Joker’s smile grew, “Oracle and Skull are waiting.”

Makoto gasped.

“So they are safe as well.” Yusuke leaned against the wall in sheer relief, “Thank goodness.”

“Panther and Noir?” Makoto whispered.

“They’re last on the list.” Mona said, “After we drop you off with Oracle and Skull, we’ll go get them and then form a plan with our other allies to end this once and for all.”

“Let’s go then.” Makoto stated, resolve pouring into her posture.

“We kept everything of import on our costumes at all times.” Yusuke, with Mona tucked under one arm like a plush doll, hastily cleaned the spilled groceries and set them aside, “So we’re ready when you are.”

“You...”

The unfamiliar voice from before, trembling with rage, snapped the peace.

Joker looked into the livid golden eyes of a boy their age standing in the doorway. His golden blond hair was done in a short braid, and he wore dark clothes under a scarlet overcoat. A massive suit of silver armor stood behind him, blocking their exit.

“Are they friends, or enemies?” Joker whispered to Makoto.

“We’ve been back and forth a few times before we settled on mutual allies...” She murmured. “They came with us on their day off to help with groceries.”

Theodore, who remained still and silent until now, ran a finger over his Compendium at the raw hostility radiating off the boy.

“You have a talking animal.”

“Eh?” Mona blinked at the boy, “Does he mean me?”

Makoto flinched, and waved her arms as the boy glared daggers at Joker, “It’s not what you think, Edward!” She cried, “Mona is... he’s nothing like Nina!”

“Then explain.” Blue sparks erupted through the apartment, and the glove on Edward’s right hand was sliced apart by a sharp blade sprouting from his metal arm. “Now .”

“Brother...” The metal suit behind Edward spoke in a soft and young voice that didn’t belong to such a gargantuan behemoth.

“We already did, once.” Yusuke’s pointed glare clashed with Edward’s, and the energy in the air turned frigid, “But you were the ones who didn’t believe us even after blood rained from the sky. Joker is our Leader, and Mona our friend and teammate, like we explained before.”

“Right.” A mirthless smirk creased Edward’s face, “The whole bullshit about being from another world because of a pissy chalice. Get real.”

Something in Yusuke’s eyes turned cold, and the temperature of the apartment fell, “Hughes believed us when we first told him.”

The boy and the metal suit went dangerously still. He didn’t know what history this world had, or what had happened between Fox and Queen and the rest of this world, but one thing was certain.

Joker sighed, snapping attention back on him. “We don’t have time for this.”

He walked past Makoto, Mona, and Yusuke. Joker didn’t hesitate when Edward’s arm blade was pointed at him, stopping when the weapon’s tip was right over his heart. The entirety of the boy’s right arm was like a clockwork masterpiece, the cold silvery metal glinting sharply.

Fafnir slid into place as his mask, hissing across the mindscape.

“Two things could happen from here, depending on what you choose to do next.” Joker stated, not breaking eye contact with Edward, who remained stubborn in his own right, “If you try to attack us, then Mona and I can take Queen and Fox away from here, and you would never see us again.”

The metal suit put a hand on Edward’s shoulder, “Brother, I think we should-”

“Quiet, Alphonse! What’s the other choice, aside from stabbing the asshole in front of me? You should know that combining a human with an animal is a heinous crime!”

“But he’s not.” Makoto said.

“She’s right!” Mona scrambled out from under Yusuke’s arm and hopped next to Joker’s shins.

“Then what are you?”

“Er, well... that’s a bit complicated.” Mona said, “To put it in simple terms, I’m the personification of Humanity’s Hope. I... I wasn’t ‘combined’ between a human and an animal in the way you’re probably thinking.”

Edward stared intently at Mona for a long minute, his expression pinching.

Joker cracked a smile, “Lay down your weapon and see the truth for yourself. We’ve gathered allies across two different worlds already, do you want to be the third to join the fight against Yaldabaoth, or do you want to be left to fend for yourselves?”

“Brother .” The metal suit named Alphonse placed both hands firmly on Edward’s shoulders and pulled him away, the tip of the arm-blade no longer jabbing Joker’s chest, “I think they’re telling the truth. They have been the whole time. Their unique powers... how they helped us and many others... and now their friends are really here, too. We should return their kindness, brother. You know it’s only right.”

The short spitfire’s jaw finally relaxed, and he slowly lowered his arm.

“We’ll go along for now and see this ‘evidence’ for ourselves, but if you’re lying-”

“We aren’t.” Yusuke coolly interjected.

“-you’ll be sorry.”

“Then we have nothing to worry about.” Makoto said with a serene smile, but then her eyes went wide and she stared between Joker and Mona, “Er, how did you two get here, by the way? There was no way to recharge our phones here, and we didn’t even have the app anymore...”

Yusuke nodded, “Unfortunately, the batteries died within a few days, so we never got the chance to try anything.”

“Come on, we’ll show you.” Joker said.

The pair of brothers stepped aside to let Joker walk out the front door, either locked onto Joker with laser accuracy. Theodore and Mona followed, dragging the rest of them outside. Joker shot his grapple and grinned when he heard Makoto and Yusuke gasp at his instantaneous ascension.

“Don’t fall behind!” Mona cackled as he used a burst of wind to join Joker.

“Shall we, Queen?” Yusuke asked with a smirk.

“Yes, we shall, Fox.”

They donned their costumes in bright veils of blue, and used the crates next to their door to seamlessly join him, Theodore stalking like a shadow behind. Edward’s annoyed groan reached Joker’s ears and, after a flash of blue lightning, the brothers joined the group from a rising column of earth.

“I see our Leader still loves to showoff.” Fox smiled, “It is... a relief to see it again after so long.”

“No kidding.” Queen stated, “Which way, Joker?”

Joker took the lead across the rainy city, several pairs of footsteps echoing just behind him. They were halfway back when Fox spoke to Theodore for the first time.

“Now that the heat of the moment has passed... I’m afraid I’ve never seen you before.” Fox said, “Who are you?”

Theodore chuckled, “I’m Lavenza’s older brother.”

“Brother?” Queen whispered in shock, “I didn’t know she had siblings.”

“Neither did I until recently.” Joker quipped.

“There are four of us in total. Elizabeth is my twin, and our eldest sister is named Margaret. Though I suppose there could be five if you wanted to count Justine and Caroline separately.”

“Um... wouldn’t that make seven siblings?” Alphonse asked.

“Someone can’t count.” Edward muttered.

“No.” Theodore cast Edward an icy look, but his gaze softened when he looked at Alphonse, “Our youngest sister was split in two by Yaldabaoth’s malevolent powers, and was only able to fuse herself back together thanks to Joker’s efforts. It’s a touchy subject for her, so we only count four whole siblings to help ease her pain.”

“I see. I’m sorry she went through that.” Alphonse whispered. “We know what it’s like to not be whole. Don’t we, brother?”

Edward mumbled something incoherent, but the irate knot in his brow lifted, if only a little.

“I’m sure she would appreciate the sentiment.”

They reached the Door’s outline soon after. Joker placed his hands flat on the surface, and the Door appeared in a flash of lightning and blue sparks.

“This is...” Edward stepped up to it with a well hidden, but haunted, expression.

“It’s how Yaldabaoth banished us here.” Fox said, eyes wide.

“Yeah.” Queen placed a hand over her heart, “We were fighting with our friends before Fox and I were tossed through this door. The next thing we knew, we woke up here in the streets of Amestris with no way to get home.”

“That’s basically what happened with us.” Mona said, eyes downcast, “Were your Personas weakened, too?”

“For a while, yes.” Fox glared at the Door with new determination, “But we refused to give up. We fought hard to survive in this world so we could see everyone again and give Yaldabaoth the punishment he deserves!”

“He’s getting what’s coming to him.” The Door yawned open to darkness. The four Personas who escorted them appeared around Joker in swirling cerulean, and he pulled at his glove with a devious smirk, “I promise.”

“Joker...” Queen glanced between Futsunushi, Odin, Fafnir, and Cybele with wonder. She stepped up to his side, with both Fox and Mona joining him on the other, “We’re with you.”

“All the way.” Fox said.

Joker’s heart felt at ease as they dove into the darkness as a team. Edward and Alphonse hesitated, but with a firm nod from Theodore, they ventured into the unknown, too. They shifted uneasily in this vast expanse of nothingness, but remained silent as the four Phantom Thieves traversed over a path of gold.

“Hey, look at that!” Mona cried before they ascended the staircase, “The path looks shorter.”

Joker looked up the few spirals leading upwards as opposed to dozens, “Do you think Oracle did something?”

Mona's eyes sparkled as he leapt up the stairs, "There's only one way to find out!"

"So our Leader not only has an even more stylish look, but you've grown so strong as to call upon many Personas." Fox smiled at the surrounding deities as they ran, "How many Personas can you summon?"

"Right now, thirteen at once." Joker said, "It shouldn't be too much longer before I can summon all sixteen again like when..."

Queen blinked, "Like when... what?"

Joker's smile tightened, "Never mind. Oracle and Skull could probably tell you more."

They reached the top of the staircase and approached the tear, the spot of brightness pouring into the endless void like the beating heart of a fiery star, and returned to the world of superheroes.

The sunlight coming in through the ceilings was a dusky pink in color, and boxes of food and other supplies were dotted around the central plaza. Familiar faces turned to them as they touched down on the USJ's floor.

"Oh! Did it work!?" Oracle's voice called across the USJ.

"That voice..." Queen looked around until her eyes trailed upwards to Prometheus. "Oracle!?"

"Queen! Fox!" Prometheus dropped down and disappeared, Oracle ran to them surrounded in a flurry of cinders.

Skull pulled himself away from the fountain and rushed to join them.

Joker grinned as Oracle jumped into Queen's arms, sniffing as they held one another. Skull stopped a few inches from Fox, grinning.

Fox cleared his throat and rapidly blinked, "It's good to see you again, Skull."

"Ah, come here!" Skull wrapped his arms around Fox and lifted him off his feet.

Fox, despite being taller, sank into the embrace with a hearty chuckle.

"Don't hog him all to yourself, Skull!" Oracle pulled away from Queen, "I wanna hug Inari, too!"

Skull set Fox on his feet, "All yours, Oracle."

Warmth continued to spread in Joker's heart as Oracle latched onto Fox like a koala, the latter scoffing softly before he wrapped his arms around her. Skull scratched the back of his head as he approached Queen, who didn't wait to give him a hug.

Joker looked out across the USJ to give the four of them a few moments together.

Urahara and Nezu were surrounded by the same variety computers and screens marked with Oracle's hieroglyphics, and Joker was surprised to see La Brava helping them by using Oracle's laptop.

"Welcome back." Mr. Compress approached, "Sorry we weren't here the first time you returned."

Joker smiled as Spinner and Gentle Criminal joined him, "Don't worry about it. How long were we gone this time? The pathway between worlds was shorter."

"About seven hours!" Nezu called from the computers, "It seems Oracle's ability to manipulate time and space can do marvelous wonders with the right data at her disposal!"

"I've never seen so much data all at once." La Brava looked up from the laptop in the midst of scattered equipment, "I'm not even sure I understand half of this stuff.”

“That’s alright.” Urahara stated, “You’ve helped us out a lot by just being able to compile it like I asked.” He looked past Joker and blinked, “Oh? Do we have more otherworldly guests?”

Edward went as white as a sheet. Joker couldn’t see Alphonse’s expression under that helmet, but he was as still as a statue.

Queen pursed her lips, “I don’t want to say I told you so, but...”

“We didn’t lie.” Fox nodded as he and Oracle finally separated.

“I...” Edward scoffed. He crossed his arms and turned away, golden eyes staring up at the massive rift that warped reality, “Yeah. You didn’t lie.”

Alphonse sighed, “That’s his way of apologizing.”

“Shut up, Al!”

“My, my!” Nezu grinned as he walked front and center between the joining Phantom Thieves and the pair of brothers, “Welcome, welcome! I’m sure that this comes as quite a shock, but-”

“More talking animals.” Edward looked strangely at Nezu, “You got to be freaking kidding me.”

“I suppose you could say...” A mischievous glint entered Fox’s eye, “You find this prepaw sterous.”

Fox got incredulous looks from across the USJ.

Queen face-palmed.

“Really, dude?” Skull shook his head, “That didn’t even land the first time!”

Oracle playfully punched him in the gut, “You still haven’t learned to make better jokes!? What’s wrong with you, Inari!?”

Fox rubbed his stomach, “I was just trying to lighten the mood.”

“It didn’t work, dumbass.” Edward snapped.

Nezu chuckled, “That’s quite alright. I do enjoy bad puns every once in a while! Now, how about some introductions before we get our newest additions settled?”

Queen faced them and bowed respectfully, “I’m Queen, advisor to the Phantom Thieves.”

“Fox.” He looked across all of the new faces, his critical eye landing especially on Mr. Compress’ getup in interest, “It seems we’re not the only ones who like to look stylish.”

“Brother…” Alphonse urged Edward, but the other boy turned away with a scowl. The metal suit gave off a long sigh, “I’m Alphonse Elric. This is my older brother, Edward Elric. We’re alchemists.”

“Alchemists, eh?” Urahara grinned, “Urahara Kisuke, at your service. We’re from the world where Oracle and Skull were trapped in.”

Alphonse tilted his head, “”We?””

“Older brother, you say?” Alphonse startled as Yoruichi was suddenly perched on his massive shoulders, staring down at Edward, “You’re so small I didn’t even see you.”

Edward flinched as a stormy expression overtook him.

“Uh oh.” Queen whispered.

Fox sighed lightly, “Here we go. I wonder if this should make for an entertaining painting…”

“U-Um!” Alphonse waved his hands, “I’m sure this... talking cat, didn’t mean it!”

“Oh, I meant it.” Yoruichi tilted her head as her tail waved back and forth, smug amusement radiating off of her body.

“WHO ARE YOU CALLING SO SMALL THEY COULD WALK THROUGH THE HEAD OF A PIN!?”

“You. Obviously .”

“I’LL TURN YOU INTO A FREAKING HAT, YOU DAMN FLEABAG!”

“You’ll have to catch me first, little boy.” Yoruichi jumped off of Alphonse and pranced away, while Edward rushed after her with a murderous expression.

“Brother, please!” Alphonse called as Edward chased Yoruichi around the fountain, the ninja feline fluidly dodging Edward’s hands with little to no effort. “You’re embarrassing yourself...”

Urahara covered his face with a fan as they all watched the chaos, “Yoruichi loves to tease people, but this is a better reaction than when she used to pick on Byakuya. She’ll be entertained for days. Don’t take it so seriously, Edward, it’s just her way of ‘breaking the ice!’”

Edward glared at Urahara, “Stay outta this, old man!”

“Old man?” Urahara fanned himself, his other hand grasping his chest in mock hurt, “I might be over 300 years old, but that’s still young in shinigami terms!”

“Huh!?”

“Are you done already, shorty?” Yoruichi called from the fountain.

Mr. Compress tipped his hat as Edward continued to chase her, “I admit, interacting with so many colorful characters from other worlds has been... an experience.”

“Oh?” Joker stuck his hands in his pockets and smirked, “I think you’d be good at this because of Mona and I.”

Mr. Compress laughed, “Quite.”

“We introduced ourselves to Oracle and Skull while you were away.” Gentle Criminal said as he looked towards Joker’s teammates, “La Brava and Oracle were practically peas in a pod right from the start.”

“Yeah!” Spinner grinned, “Me and Skull chatted for a bit, too. It’s... actually kinda surprising how much we had in common.”

“I’d personally like to get to know Fox and Queen better.” Mr. Compress turned to them. Queen’s face had fallen into both hands, while Fox made a square between in his thumbs and pointer fingers as he followed Edward’s and Yoruichi’s frantic chase across the central plaza.

“Joker.” Mona caught Joker’s attention with a serious expression, “We should stop messing around. We still have to get Panther and Noir.”

“Right.” Joker sobered as he gave Mr. Compress and the others a glance, “Take care of them?”

Spinner beamed, “You don’t even need to ask!”

“We’ll treat them as our own.” Gentle Criminal put a hand over his heart, “I promise.”

They walked over to the other Phantom Thieves, and it took Oracle all of two seconds to swipe his phone and summon Prometheus without so much as asking.

Edward froze in his tracks as he and Alphonse watched Prometheus in silent awe.

Nezu cleared his throat as he stood beside Alphonse. Seeing the tiny rat next to a towering seven foot suit of armor was nothing short of comical, in any other circumstance.

“I’m sure you have many questions, so why don’t we sit down and have a talk?” Nezu waved towards the table by the fountain, “I’ll explain everything as much as I can about what’s happening, and in return can you tell me about your world?”

“Anything that could aid us for the final battle.” Urahara stated, “If we are to win, we must all work together to do so.”

Alphonse looked over to Edward, “Brother?”

“Fine.” Edward gave a sour look to Yoruichi, who stuck her nose up at him in smug victory.

“I would like to know everything as well,” Yusuke’s squared fingers landed over the fountain, “This world is so much different compared to where we were.”

“It’s almost staggering.” Queen said as she stared at Nezu, “I never imagined there could be such variety.”

“I got it!” Oracle voice called from Prometheus. A light shone at the bottom and Joker’s phone slowly lowered to him from the beam, “The final world where Panther and Noir are. All yours, Joker!”

He swiped it and smiled at Fox and Queen, “We’ll be back. Stay here and get comfortable.”

Mona jumped up to Joker’s shoulder, “We’ll all be together again really soon, just you wait.”

Tears laced Queen’s eyes, but she had a smile.

“Be careful.” Fox stated.

Nezu led their newest additions to the table while Joker and Mona approached the rift once again. He looked at the app, carefully studying the Keywords to this new world - Target: Lovers & Empress, Door: Gehenna, Core: Demons & Exorcism, Location: School.

“Another school?” Mona whispered, “I hope we don’t terrify any students.”

“There’s no other choice but to go regardless.” Margaret joined them at the foot of the golden stairs, “But if we are to land right in the middle of a school with either demons or exorcists present, it’s best we choose the right Personas to tag along.”

The previous four vanished and were replaced by their brethren.

“Satanael. Beelzebub. Mother Harlot. And... Messiah Picaro.” Joker looked up at Prometheus, then down to Urahara as he returned to the mass of computers set up for him. “Ready?”

Urahara smirked, “All yours, Joker.”

“We shortened the time difference from the data we already gathered,” Oracle stated, “We’re going to do the same to this next world. Still, don’t do anything too crazy!”

Mona snorted, “We’ll try.”

“Disconnecting from Fox and Queen’s world,” Joker watched as the stairs shattered again, the shards floating around in the air like playful specs of gold dust, “And connecting to Noir and Panther’s world... now.”

The fragments pieced themselves back together in a whirlwind of solidified sunlight, and the group ventured back into the void without fear. They didn’t stop to comment on how the road weaved to the left now, how it was a winding path swerving back and forth like the stride of a sand snake. Instead, they kept going forward with a single minded determination to rescue the last of their friends.

The first words were uttered by Mona as they reached the end of the shortest path yet, whispered in disgusted, yet intrigued, horror.

“What the...”

This final Door lay flat on the floor. Or whatever surface it lay upon now. Joker vaguely remembered the great golden gate that swallowed Panther and Noir without mercy, decorated with ornate demons and bulging eyes. It's vast circular mouth bubbled with pitch black liquid similar to tar.

“This won't be pleasant.” Messiah Picaro stated.

“No shit, Sherlock.” Beelzebub snapped.

“So we'll get a bath this time,” Mother Harlot cackled, “So what?”

“Do we just... go in?” Mona asked, hesitant.

Joker grimaced as he stood on the edge of the golden path. One step away from dropping into the demonic gate's maw. Satanael hovered at his side, frowning deeply.

“If anything happens, call us back into the mindscape immediately.”

“Here goes nothing.”

Mona startled on his shoulder, “W-wait, Joker -”

Joker dropped. His Personas and Margaret dove after them as they sank knee deep in unsteady tar, which began to roil like a bubbling pot.

“Are you sure this was a good idea!?” Mona called as the tar swallowed Joker up to his waist. The images of skulls and demons began to crawl up to Joker's chest, howling in rage and agony.

“Joker!” Margaret called, her Compendium snapping open, “I can-”

“No!” Mother Harlot calmed her dragon as it thrashed through the black tar, “We must not harm the gate! We don’t know what could happen!”

“Enough!” Beelzebub waved his massive skull staff under the gate’s giant eyes, his wings buzzing in fury, “On my name as the demon lord of flies, I order you to let us through unscathed!”

The gate froze, eyes trembling under the point of Beelzebub’s staff. It quieted, the demonic shapes within the tar melting away. Joker and Mona were pulled under, and immediately found themselves being spat out on the other side in a pile of people and Personas.

“Ugh...” Mona stood up as the Personas disentangled themselves, “That was way worse than the last Door we went through.”

Joker checked himself over for any lingering ooze, relieved that he found none clinging to him. He studied the dirt and patches of grass at their feet, to the high pine trees rising up like towers on all sides. Joker frowned at the gate set in the ground, his eyes catching on the strange lines carved into the soil all around it.

He ran his hand over one of the lines. The grass and other weeds made it impossible to tell what shape it held, and the darkness of the night sky above didn’t help either.

Joker frowned as he took a moment to think. Urahara’s world had a blanket of power in the air, the next bore electricity and the remnants of an ancient god. This world had a sour curl to it, like a tainted ash falling over the world like snow.

“How is this a school?” Satanael curled his wings closer to himself, “We’re in the middle of a forest.”

“Maybe it’s like U.A., where there’s plenty of space for gardens and forests.” Mona suggested. He closed his eyes and took a deep breath, the needles of the pine trees brushing together from a gentle breeze.

“I’m uncertain.” Margaret said as she fixed her hair, “But it’s quiet here. Too quiet.”

“Wait!” Mona’s eyes snapped open, “There’s someone above us!”

“Eins, Swei, Drei!”

A fireball crashed into the ground from above. It missed, but caused a wave of heat and sparks to swirl around them. They looked up as the fiery light of another swathe of flame bathed them in orange, where an odd man sat in an ornate floating throne, one ankle crossed over his knee.

Flamboyant seemed to be in his very nature, from the stark white suit and bright stripes of pink and purple on his pants and top hat. A billowing white and purple cape spilled down from the chair. The fireball grew in size above him, highlighting his pointed ears and the sharp fangs in his wide smile in flickering flashes of orange.

Beelzebub’s wings fluttered, “Wait, you...”

The theatrical man leaned forward and squinted at Beelzebub, “Oh? What do we have here?”

The sound of clinking metal echoed through the shadows of the trees, and a pair of hounds attached to chains burst out with fangs bared. They collided with the still growing fireball suspended over the man, who cried out in shock as the flames were swallowed whole.

A figure landed in front of Joker as it recalled her dogs, a tall demoness in a flowing black dress and cape, the vibrant colors of her six eyes sparkling with the raining embers.

Mona gasped, “Is that you, Hecate!?”

Hecate froze as her head swiveled to study them.

“Mephisto .” Another figure floated out of the shadowy trees, the vibrant pink and purple of a giant skull spinning. The shadowy woman sprouting from its top waved her hand, and the iconic flash of a One Shot Kill collided with the man's floating chair. "What have we warned you about doing something foolish if this gate ever opened again?"

Pieces of the throne broke off and peppered the ground, and the strange man tumbled out. His cape flared as he hung off of one of its arms, legs kicking through the air.

"It was a warning shot, Astarte!" He cried, "A warning shot!"

"If it was anything more, then I wouldn't have held back."

Joker and Mona jumped at the familiar voice of Haru. Two pairs of footsteps echoed into the clearing as Panther and Noir stopped on either side of Astarte.

Panther gasped as she grabbed Noir's arm to steady herself.

Noir blinked and looked to the center of the clearing, "Joker? Mona-chan!?"

"Joker!"

Fat tears dropped from Mona's eyes as he all but tackled Panther and Noir, each of them wrapped their arms around Mona as their tears joined his on the ground. Joker was the last to join with warm eyes, holding all three of them in his arms.

After a moment, Noir lay a hand on Joker's face as she studied his new mask, "Is this real? Is this nightmare finally over?"

"Almost." Joker placed one hand on either of their shoulders, "We need you both to come with us."

Panther wiped her eyes, "Where?"

"Back to the world Joker and I were in." Mona stated as Panther snuggled him closer, "Everyone... everyone is there."

“Everyone ?” Noir shakily exhaled.

Joker’s smile grew, “Everyone. Oracle and Skull. Fox and Queen. They’re all waiting to see you again.”

Panther collapsed to her knees.

“Panther!” Joker crouched in front of her, “Are you okay?”

“Y-yes! I’m just...” Another river of tears flowed down her cheeks, but her smile was bright and relieved, “I’m just so happy that everyone is alright! We were so worried!”

“Let’s go!” Noir faced the gate as Joker helped Panther to her feet.

“Wait, wait, WAIT!” Mephisto floated down, using an umbrella that sprouted bat wings to glide effortlessly and land in front of them. It was like a scene straight out of Alice in Wonderland as he tucked the umbrella under his arm, “You can’t leave without me!”

“What!?” Mona screeched, “We don’t even know who you are! You attacked us right when we got here!”

“I meant no harm, I was simply protecting what is mine.” The man smirked before he did a showman’s bow. Joker could see him staring sharply between he and Mona under the shadow of his white top hat, “I am Mephisto Pheles, principal of True Cross Academy!”

“Another school principal?” Mona whispered.

“Another’?” Mephisto asked.

Joker looked at Noir and Panther, “Do you trust him?”

Mephisto sputtered, “I’m right here!”

“Well, he did save us when we were first stranded here.” Panther said with a frown. “... Technically.”

“And he took care of us after.” Noir added. Mephisto flinched as she smiled sweetly at him, “As long as he behaves, then yes, we can trust him.”

Joker nodded, then turned to face Mephisto, “We’ve gathered allies across three worlds. Are you able to act as this world’s representative?”

Mephisto smirked, “I would be honored. Panther and Noir informed me about their... unique situation a while ago, but to see it in person at last is exciting!” He clapped his hands together, and something within the glimmer of his eyes seemed familiar to Joker for some reason, “Especially since there’s an alternate version of my brother standing right over there! And the Messiah, of all things! I wish the other Exorcists could see him, if only so I could watch them wet themselves!”

Messiah Picaro tilted his head.

Beelzebub scoffed.

Panther stared between Joker’s new costume and the extra Personas with wide eyes, “I have so many questions.”

“We can answer them when we reunite with everyone.” Mona said, “It’ll be easier if we’re all together.”

“I doubt we’ll be able to stop for candy along the way.” Noir glared at Mephisto, “So behave.”

“Well, actually,” Mona interrupted, “One of the people who came over from Oracle and Skull’s world is candy store owner, so who knows if he brought any sweets along with him.”

“Why didn’t you just say so!? What are we waiting for!?” Mephisto turned on his heel and, with a brilliant flare of his cape, jumped and dove headfirst into the bubbling gate.

“Wha-” Mona’s jaw dropped, “Is he crazy or something!?”

“Believe it or not, he’s way more eccentric than Fox.” Noir said.
“Especially when it comes to things like sweets and manga.”

“Seriously?” Joker asked. “He wasn’t shocked to find out that there are other worlds out there, or ask us any hard questions before he agreed. Is he really okay?”

Panther face palmed, “It’s a long story.”

“I know what you mean.” Joker stepped up to the ornate gate.

“Is it really okay to just... leave it like this?” Mona asked, “I mean, this is supposed to be a school, right?”

“Oh, Mephisto sealed off this part of the school grounds after the sky turned red.” Noir said, looking to the ground.

“You mean these weird lines everywhere in the dirt?” Joker asked.

“Yeah.” Panther said as she played with one of her pigtails, “And we were allowed to let our Personas guard it in case anything happens.”

“‘Allowed to’?” Mona’s eyes widened, “What do you mean by that?”

Panther opened and closed her mouth, but her expression fractured, barely kept together at the seams.

Noir reached over and grasped Panther’s fist with a shaking hand, “We weren’t... allowed any freedoms when we first came here. It was... difficult. Mephisto rescued us after a time, but we were still heavily restricted until the sky rained red.”

“I’m sorry.” Joker gently placed their entwined hands in both of his own, tightening his grip when he felt them shaking, “You don’t have to relive it if you don’t want to. Let’s not keep the others waiting.”

Panther gave him a thankful smile.

Noir firmly nodded, "Right!"

Hecate and Astarte returned to their respective Persona Users in a flash of blue fire.

"Please watch your step." Margaret stated with a polite bow, "Be sure not to stray off the golden path once we get inside."

"Oh! Who are you?" Noir asked.

"I am Lavenza's eldest sister, and a fellow Attendant to the Velvet Room." Margaret smiled at them, "It's a pleasure to make your acquiescence."

Panther beamed, previous horrors already buried, "Nice to meet you, too!"

Joker chuckled before he stepped into the Door. Unlike last time, he was sent straight through, though it was a little dizzying to step down and then be thrown upright a second later. He shook his head to clear it as the others joined him.

"Where are we?" Panther whispered as Joker's Personas circled protectively around them.

"A place where time escapes even my grasp. No wonder I had such trouble." Mephisto stood a few paces ahead, hands on his hips as he studied the void, "I never thought to see something like this in all my years."

"We cannot dawdle." Margaret said, "Staying here too long could prove detrimental to our health, even for one who isn't human."

Mephisto smirked at Margaret, but said nothing as Joker led them through the endless void. Thankfully, this winding path had been the shortest, so it didn't take long to delve back into the world of superheroes.

Darkness painted the USJ's ceiling again, but the facility was busy in spite of it. More boxes of food and other supplies littered the central plaza, with tables and bed rolls around the fountain. Urahara, Yoruichi, La Brava, and Nezu worked around the growing number of computers and tangle of cables that thrummed in tandem to Prometheus's markings. Edward and Alphonse sat at one table with a mountain of books surrounding them, the older brother absorbed in a thick physics textbook.

Teachers and vigilantes guarded various points and turned to them at their entrance, but kept a respectful distance as the newcomers gawked at their surroundings.

All in all, the USJ was looking less like a training facility for students and more like a budding war camp.

"Panther! Noir!" Queen sprinted to them, and the other Phantom Thieves weren't far behind.

"Everyone!" Noir's eyes shone with tears as she and Panther collided in a group hug.

Oracle banished Prometheus to land on them from above. Joker couldn't help but smile as they all traded words of encouragement doused in the shaky voices of friends who had finally found each other again after so long.

Nezu approached bearing a warm smile, "I am glad you were successful, Joker." His eyes turned to their otherworldly guest, "And who might you be?"

Mephisto did another showman's bow as he stared at Nezu, "I am Mephisto Pheles, principal of True Cross Academy for exorcists! I offered to be the liaison for the world were Panther and Noir were entrapped. And you might be?"

"Oh! You may call me Nezu, I am the principal of the top heroics school in all of Japan!"

Mephitso's eyes widened, "Heroics?" He cast a sweeping glance over the costumes of the heroes across the facility, "As in... superheroes?"

"Indeed!"

"A world of superheroes !? Fantastic!" An excited sparkle entered Mephisto's eyes as he clapped his hands together, "And I heard one of the people from the other worlds is a candy shop owner?"

"Yes," Nezu waved towards Urahara, "That would be him over there."

"Excuse me while I go make his acquaintance!!"

Joker and Mona stared as Mephisto rushed over so fast he generated his own gust of wind. They couldn't hear what was being said, but Urahara regarded Mephisto with wide eyes at his sudden appearance. The eccentric man spoke quickly and made wild hand gestures before Urahara grinned and produced a comically large lollipop from the sleeve of his haori and offered it to Mephisto.

"My, my." Nezu chuckled as Mephisto accepted it and began chowing down with gusto. Yoruichi rolled her eyes good-naturedly as Urahara pulled out another and ate it in much the same manner, "He is quite the character."

"That's one way to put it." Mona stated, "He didn't even ask us questions, he dove straight back into the portal we came through."

"I think we'll get along like a house on fire!" Nezu cackled, bearing his own terrifying grin.

Joker cleared his throat as he tried not to imagine how many worlds would burn to cinders if Urahara, Mephisto, and Nezu were left alone for too long. "How long were we gone this time?"

"Four hours." Nezu's grin fell, "Edward and Alphonse have settled, for the most part. I believe accepting the truth, coming from a world like theirs, took some time.”

“So what happens now?” Mona looked to their other friends still wrapped in a group hug, “We have everyone.”

Nezu steepled his paws together, “Ideally, I’d round everyone up and we’ll all pool our knowledge together to formulate a plan! However…”

Joker raised a brow, “What?”

Nezu turned to the other Phantom Thieves holding one another, “I believe you all deserve a few quiet hours together, away from all of this. Let me handle the nitty gritty details of this meeting. Joker, Mona, go and spend some alone time with your friends at the teacher’s dorm.”

“Nezu…” Mona whispered with wide eyes.

“What about Kaito and Eri?”

“They’ve been spending these past few nights at the Shinsou dorm, along with Marshmallow. Everyone else is already here.” Nezu smiled softly at Joker, “You’ll have the dorm all to yourselves. Although, for the time being, it would be wise not to bring anyone out to the grounds. We’ve isolated everything in this facility as to not spread panic and confusion among the student body, and I would like to keep it the same with your friends until we have a solid plan in place for the endgame.”

“... Thank you.” Joker murmured.

“No need to thank me. Take as long as you need!”

Nezu turned on his heel and rushed towards Urahara and the rest of the otherworldly visitors.

Joker closed the rift, the golden stairs dissipating to nothing, as the dark wound stitched itself together. He shoved his phone in his pocket and approached his teammates.

“Everyone, I need you to come with me.”

“Of course, Joker.” Fox bowed his head, “Where to?”

“You’ll see.”

Joker walked towards the massive USJ staircase. He gestured for Lavenza to follow from the waiting Attendants, and banished his Personas back into the mindscape. The heroes and vigilantes respectfully stepped out of their way as Joker held his head high. Joker paused at the top of the stairs and looked out across the facility.

“What is this place?” Panther asked as she looked across the destruction.

“This is a world full of superheroes.” Mona started, “We’re currently at a high school that trains students to be full time heroes. We... this is the place where Joker and I landed after Yaldabaoth banished us.”

“Yeah,” Joker gestured to the dome that would’ve held the Typhoon scenario, tattered and mutilated, “We woke up in there.”

“Really?” Noir’s eyes widened.

“From here, it looks like an amusement park.” Queen frowned, “A destroyed amusement park.”

“It wasn’t always like this.” Mona looked between all of their teammates, “We heard some of you talk about the sky changing. Did you guys get the Red Rain, too?”

“Red Rain?” Skull blinked, “You mean like when the sky turned all red and it rained blood like it did back home? Yep.”

“Us too.” Panther’s gloved hands balled into fists, “We thought it was the end of the world.”

“We were so scared, too.” Oracle whispered as she looked to the ground, “We thought Yaldabaoth was going to attack then and there.”

“We got it too, but it passed without another incident.” Fox stated coolly, his eyes had a hard glint as he looked across the ruin, “But if this place received it as well... why is it so destroyed?”

“From the attack of a single Shadow.”

“What!?” Panther whirled around to Joker, “Shadows attacked here!?”

“They did because Joker regained access to the Metaverse app and we drew them here from our home world.” Mona shivered and crossed his arms, “The leader Shadow said that this was the first world they were trying to subdue before Yaldabaoth could come and finish the job. These Shadows... they were like nothing we ever encountered in the Metaverse before. If the Shadows got this strong, then there’s no doubt in my mind Yaldabaoth must be gaining significant strength, too.”

“Then the situation is worse than we realized.” Noir placed a hand over her heart, “Do we even stand a chance if Yaldabaoth is stronger than he was before?”

“We barely survived the last encounter.” Queen rapidly shook her head, “What if he does something like this a second time?”

“If he separates us again...” Oracle was on the verge of tears as her voice trembled, “I don’t know if I could make it.”

“Of course we’ll win.” Joker stepped into the center of his uncertain comrades, expression set in stony determination, “Do you know why? Look down there.”

Their eyes followed to where Joker pointed in the central plaza. Nezu stood on the rim of the fountain as every other person in the facility gathered around. Heroes and vigilantes from all backgrounds.

Spiritual individuals with centuries of experience. A pair of brothers bearing secret and forbidden knowledge. Another school principal that didn't look all the way human. Three other Attendants who supported Wild Cards of the past, and who support Joker now.

"Because Yaldabaoth is alone. Yaldabaoth thought he could break us, thought he would win by separating us across space and time, but he gravely miscalculated the strength of our hearts." Joker put his balled fist over the center of his chest, "He may have gotten stronger, but we have too. We've gained friends and allies from across these worlds, good people who won't stand by and let Yaldabaoth do as he pleases anymore! As long as we band together, as long as these multiple worlds stand side by side against his tyranny, then Yaldabaoth doesn't even stand a chance."

Fire ignited his soul, the same fire that flooded his eyes with vibrant gold and countless other iridescent colors. His friends were left speechless as the sparks of his Rebellion breathed new life with them. They looked between each other with growing smiles.

"You're right. Of course you are." Fox's grasped the hilt of his katana, "How foolish to be scared when we are all reunited once more!"

"That's our Leader!" Skull cried as he raised his fist. "We're totally going to kick ass!"

Queen cracked her knuckles, "The next time we see Yaldabaoth, he's dead meat."

"Yaldabaoth will feel all of the pain he put us through a hundred fold!" Noir traced the rim of her hat with a delicate finger, "I cannot wait to see him squirm in delicious agony."

"He has another thing coming if he thinks he can walk all over us again!" Panther waved her arm in a sharp arc.

"Muehehe..." Oracle grinned in mischief, "And with my support as the Navigator, these new Shadows won't know what hit 'em!"

Mona looked up at his partner in crime, and firmly nodded.

Lavenza smiled with the utmost pride.

“So, where are we going, then?” Skull asked.

“Don’t we need to be down there to help make a plan?” Queen said, looking down at the plaza.

“We’ll join them soon” Joker smiled. He turned to the Velvet Room door waiting by the USJ entrance, “We can use a shortcut to get to where Mona and I have been staying, we could have some coffee and curry and just... reminisce.”

A hand grasped his shoulder, and he looked to see Queen smiling at him, “I think... I would like that.”

“Coffee and curry!!” Oracle raise both arms, “We haven’t had any in so long!!”

“What are we waiting for!?” Skull bore an ear to ear grin.

“It feels... almost nostalgic to think of your coffee after so long.” Fox chuckled, “I cannot wait to savor it again.”

“We all deserve to enjoy Joker’s cooking once more.” Noir stated.

Mona cackled, “Joker’s only gotten better and better! He can make cakes, and brownies, and-”

“You can make sweets now, too!?” Panther grabbed Joker’s wrist and marched towards the Velvet Room door, “No more standing around! Let’s go, everyone!”

Joker bore a bright grin as they all poured into the Velvet Room.

No matter what plan they would concoct and what hard battles lay in the near future... before all of this finally ended for good... he could just be himself with his friends again.

Joker knew in his heart that Yaldabaoth's days were officially numbered.

Word limit? I have no idea what that means anymore.

Urahara, Nezu, and Mephisto walk into a bar. Truth is the bar tender. Edward and Alphonse have chosen Life and decided to run long before they arrived at said bar.

Anywho, now for the important info about the other Thieves stories! I know there is a decent mix of people who don't care much for the other thieves, while there are some that do. So! I'll satisfy both sides by writing the other Thieves journeys in Part 4 of the Thieves Den series to fill in a lot of what they insinuate happened to them in this chapter(Part 1 being this main story, Part 2 being extra bits and one-off side stories, Persona Builds, Arcana list, ect, Part 3 being the Nier Automata AU, and part 4 will be the other Thieves' adventures through the other worlds, once part 1 is done and after a significant break.) Each chapter will be a one and done deal of everything that's happened. I might split them into two chapters depending on how long they get, but seeing that Chapter B of the Automata AU may or may not breech 50k words... I'm not exactly averse to writing such long chapters anymore.

Personally, I think I'm most excited to write out what happens to Oracle and Skull in the Bleach world. Aizen will have Regrets and I'm going to shamelessly have as much Parental/Protective Urahara as much as possible, and nobody can stop me. I didn't realize how much I've missed writing a character like Urahara. Aside from the book or three worth of original content on a flashdrive, I've written a couple of Bleach cross over fics quite some time ago(they've never seen the light of day), and since writing this chapter an ancient Bleach/Okami crossover idea has been ghosting the back of my brain and refuses to leave. (It's quite literally almost 17 years old at this point, and will need to be burned to the ground and rebuilt from the ground up, but something to consider writing after all my currents works on here are done... among many other fic ideas yet)

Last thing, the reason why Mephisto felt somewhat familiar for Joker in that one line is just a reference to how they almost used Mephistopheles as Joker's starter Persona instead of Arsene. The more you know!

Well, enough rambling. I have the Uber Mega Sick Brain and am going to lay down now before this fever gets the best of me.

Next Update: October 28th

Prison Labor

Chapter 96: Prison Labor

“We had to adapt to our new environments or suffer gravely for it.” Morgana swiveled his head around, eyes glistening, “Yaldabaoth might’ve tried to tear us apart, but I think, after everything we’ve all been through, it did the opposite.”

“We’re together again.” Ren stated as an honest smile broke through, “And stronger than we’ve ever been.”

The Phantom Thieves looked between each other with new depths of appreciation and familial love they’ve never had before, not even when they were facing Yaldabaoth together the first time.

We'll get a small taste and hints as to what the other original PT's went through, but like I said with the previous chapter's end note, what the other thieves' imply here will be covered in their full stories... once i get around to them.

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

The Phantom Thieves piled into Ren’s dorm, having dispelled their costumes the moment the Velvet Room Door closed behind them.

Ryuji, Futaba, Ann, and Haru wore clothes that looked normal for modern day Japanese teenagers. Makoto and Yusuke, however, donned old styled clothes with a surprising amount of comfort and familiarity.

“What the-!?” Ann looked around in astonishment, “Since when could the Velvet Room do that?”

Ren stuck his hands in his pockets. “It’s new.”

Morgana snickered, “Neat trick, huh?”

“Too bad we couldn’t use it in Tokyo.” Yusuke sighed forlornly, “Oh, the train fare it would save.”

“Dude... enough about trains.” Ryuji looked between Makoto and Yusuke, “What’s with those get ups?”

“They certainly are antique.” Haru said with a smile. “You both wear them with such effortless allure!”

“Thank you.” Makoto pulled at the sleeve of her blue military jacket, “They took some getting used to.”

“The world we were in was set in some alternate version of the early 1900’s.” Yusuke looked down on himself, frowning, “We faced a lot of limitations and had to adapt quickly, one example being that we couldn’t charge our phones due of the lack of modern electrical outlets.”

“Huh.” Futaba perched at the end of Ren’s bed like a gargoyle, “The world Ryuji and I were in was set in 2001-ish. Most technology was a bit outdated, but we were able to jury rig stuff to charge ours with Urahara’s help. He’s pretty much a genius, so it was easy.”

“Urahara wasn’t the only genius, you know.” Ryuji ruffled Futaba’s hair, “There were times where you two went off on a science tangent that even Yoruichi and Tessai couldn’t keep up with!”

Futaba pushed up her glasses and smiled.

“Oh,” Haru looked down at the floor, her hands twisting together, “Our phones were confiscated for quite some time, but the world we were in was modern.”

“But we got them back!” Ann said with a tight smile, “... Eventually.”

“Does everyone have their phones on them?” Ren asked.

“Of course.” Yusuke reached into his breast pocket and pulled his out, “Makoto and I were never without them, just in case.”

“We can let our phones charge in here while we talk.” Ren dug around in his desk, giving the others a moment to really look around his room.

“So this is where you two stayed?” Haru’s eyes twinkled at the Phantom Thief banner hanging over Ren’s desk, “It’s smaller than the attic in Leblanc, but it’s quite charming!”

“This is our most recent place, out of three.” Morgana said as Futaba scooped him up and cradled him to her chest, “We started at an internet cafe and then we had to move to a bar’s attic.”

“Hey!” Ryuji grinned as he rushed over to Ren’s side, grabbing the Seth figurine, “Dude, that’s so cool!”

“Why are there figurines of your Personas?” Makoto asked, eyes wide. “... Or a banner with our logo on it?”

“Some of my Personas managed to get into the spotlight with the public.” Ren smiled at the Arsene figurine, “I bought this one because Arsene was embarrassed about it.”

“How did that happen?” Makoto asked with a hint of resignation.

“W-well,” Morgana sputtered, “The owner of the internet cafe was being harassed by a really bad hero! To save him, and the other people under his thumbs, well... it was public. Our original idea was to get our names out there so you guys would be able to find us if you ever found a way here, and our reputation just took off from there.”

“People needed help, and who were we to ignore them?” Ren kept his eyes down in the desk drawers.

Where were those darn chargers?

Yusuke chuckled fondly, “It wouldn’t be our Leader without his iconic heart of gold.”

“Right?” Ann’s smile was warm as she approached the board where dozens of photos hung, “Oh, most of those people in these pictures were at that other facility! And...” Ann gasped at a particular photo, “Who’s this cutie?”

The others leaned in to get a good look.

“She’s adorable!” Futaba cried.

“That’s Eri!” Morgana beamed.

“Eri.” Futaba grinned, “Do we have a little sister, Ren!?”

“We do.” Ren paused in his digging to smile at the photo, “She’s the reason why my costume is different, the reason why I can summon so many Personas at once. She’s why the Velvet Room came back to me.”

The others exchanged glances.

“There was a time where Ren lost his powers. Eri...” Morgana stared at Eri’s photo with a sad smile.

“Needed help, and saving her reawakened my powers.”

“Like... like the full on rip-off-your-mask-in-a-spray-of-blood Awakening?” Ryuji uttered in horror, which was shared by everyone except Morgana.

Ren nodded.

“So that’s how your costume is different.” Yusuke said with a slight tilt of his head, “It all makes sense now.”

“I was there to see it.” Morgana sighed, “And so was Eri, naturally.”

Futaba adjusted her glasses, “You really went through a lot here, huh...”

Ren shrugged, “Didn’t we all?”

“I guess, but Futaba and I didn’t lose our powers!” Ryuji set the Seth figurine down and bumped shoulders with Ren. “I can’t even imagine what it would’ve been like, going through that other world without Prometheus and Seiten Taisei!”

“We weren’t really allowed to use ours for a long time,” Haru said gently, “But our Personas’ voices were always there to encourage us in times of hardship.”

Ann huffed, “They couldn’t take our Personas away no matter how hard they tried.”

“We never lost ours either,” Makoto placed a hand over her chest, “I’m sorry you went through that, Ren.”

“It’s fine, really.” Ren cleared his throat before he spoke next, “I would introduce you to Eri and the students here, but the principal thinks it’s a good idea to keep this all quiet for the time being.”

“Oh, I don’t mind.” Futaba stated as she played with Morgana’s paws.

“Agreed.” Yusuke crossed his arms as he looked between his teammates with something indiscernible in his eyes, “I hope this doesn’t make me sound selfish, but I would prefer it to be just us for a while.”

Haru nodded, “Everything else can wait.”

Makoto's face softened, "We've more than earned the right to be a little selfish, after everything."

"Damn straight." Ryuji muttered.

"Language, Ryuji." Makoto chastised with that gleam to her eye.

"S-sorry..."

Futaba and the others chuckled.

Ren finally found the extra phone chargers at the bottom of the drawer.

... He meant to organize it better, but he hadn't had the time lately.

"Let's plug in our phones, then I can at least show you guys to the kitchen."

"Curry!!" Futaba shot up from the bed, Morgana crying out as she lifted both arms with him still in her grasp.

Their gathered phones were left on his desk, the cords entwining one another in a messy tangle, but they rushed out of Ren's room at the promise of curry made by their Leader. He led them through the common room, their eyes scanning for exits and entrances, some landing on the names of this world's Phantom Thieves tacked onto other dorm rooms.

Ren went behind the counter when they reached the kitchen, opening cupboards for ingredients and cookware.

"Take a seat," He said with a smirk, "It shouldn't take long."

Ryuji crashed into the chair of the table closest to the counter, grinning wide, "Sweet!"

"Sooo, about these sweets you promised..." Ann said as she sank into the chair next to Ryuji.

Ren thought for a moment, “I suppose I can make a strawberry shortcake.”

“Yay!” Ann cheered.

“Coffee, curry, and cake.” Haru sat primly across from Ann, “It’ll be quite the meal!”

“Just don’t push yourself too hard.” Makoto took the chair across from Ryuji, Futaba and Yusuke sat beside Haru.

“Oh, this is nothing.” Ren cracked his knuckles and began his work, starting with a round of coffee. “Trust me.”

“If you’re sure...” Yusuke said.

Morgana flicked his tail, “Ren took a job at a small cafe that got crazy popular.” He stated with a smirk, “So when he says it’s nothing...”

“I really mean it.” Ren took the goose-neck kettle off the heat once it was at the right temperature, “At its peak, we would get hundreds of people coming and going during the lunch and morning rush, and naturally, all with different orders at once. So making a little extra food when it’s just us isn’t a big deal.”

Futaba’s eyes bugged out, “Wow! Just wait until Sojiro hears about this!”

Ren smiled, worn and proud at once, “... Yeah.”

He poured the steaming hot coffee into mugs and handed them out. Everyone held the warm mugs in their hands and took a sip. Everyone. Ren, after all of this time and excitement, nearly forgot that Ryuji never really liked coffee, but...

He watched his best friend take a drink without a single protest.

“Ah, the depth of flavor is most impressive.” Haru said with a serene smile, “You’ve improved from the last time we had it.”

"It's delicious. As always." Yusuke took another drink.

"Um..." Ann blinked rapidly at Ryuji as he took his next drink, "Ryuji?"

"Hmm?" Ryuji looked around the table, "What? Why's everyone starin' at me?"

"I thought you wouldn't want coffee." Makoto said.

"Sorry." Ren opened a cupboard with Shuichi's endless stash of soda. Ren was sure he wouldn't mind, "I can get you something else."

"Nah, it's fine."

Ren paused, and wasn't the only one to gawk at Ryuji.

"Are you sure you're feeling well?" Ann placed a hand over Ryuji's forehead, "You don't have a fever."

"Wha- I'm fine!" Ryuji groaned, "It's just..."

"What is it?" Haru whispered.

Ryuji stared into his half-empty mug, lips forming a tight frown, "You all know how my mom and I never really had much money after my dad left, but we still had a home to return to. Food to eat. Warm beds at night. When Oracle and I were kicked to that other world..."

Futaba brought her knees to her chest and hugged them tight, her hands grasping her pants with white knuckles.

"We were homeless. Living off scraps we could find in the trash, hiding out in a drafty warehouse that was too cold at night to be healthy. I tried to look for a job, but with my looks... people didn't take kindly to me." Ryuji shook his head with a scowl, "I felt so useless because Futaba was suffering so much. Urahara saved our asses by taking us in when he did."

“Ryuji...” Makoto placed a hand over his.

His scowl melted into a weak smile, “It’s okay. I learned not to be so picky about everything, to really appreciate the little things, you know?” He took another sip of coffee and his sunny grin returned in full, “Like being able to drink our Leader’s coffee!”

“Makoto and I were in much the same situation, at first.” Yusuke sighed, “We really do take advantage of what we have, and don’t appreciate its true value until it’s gone for good.”

“Yeah.” Ann grimaced at Haru, who lowered her head, “We weren’t in the best situation, either.”

Ren firmly nodded.

“Could it be that we’ve all grown in such a way?” Haru asked solemnly.

“I think we’ve all changed.” Futaba pet Morgana, who had taken to sitting on the table. “But that’s a given.”

“We had to adapt to our new environments or suffer gravely for it.” Morgana swiveled his head around, eyes glistening, “Yaldabaoth might’ve tried to tear us apart, but I think, after everything we’ve all been through, it did the opposite.”

“We’re together again.” Ren stated as an honest smile broke through, “And stronger than we’ve ever been.”

The Phantom Thieves looked between each other with new depths of appreciation and familial love they’ve never had before, not even when they were facing Yaldabaoth together the first time.

Lighter banter bounced around the kitchen as Ren prepared the batter for the cake, and in smaller layers so it would cook and cool faster. He slid the three layers into the oven to begin work on the curry, all the while they shared the highlights of their journeys over a few rounds of coffee.

Both the good...

“-They were almost on to us, but then Yusuke distracted Edward and Alphonse by a long winded speech about the true majesty of lobsters-”

“-That really old dorm had a cute demon for a chef! He made so many cakes and cookies and other things! I think he really liked me because he’d leave extra sweets for me after dinner-”

“-Oh man, Ichigo could never live it down! From then on, he treated Futaba like one of his own sisters! And then one time me an’ Rukia pulled a prank on Jinta because he was bein’ mean to Ururu again-”

“-And then WHAM! All the heroes and police officers were covered head to toe in glitter while Joker and I were safe miles away! Aizawa and Tsukauchi are still cagey around glitter, and Nezu has that stuffed fish in his office-”

And the bad...

“-They tried everything to ‘rid us of our demonic possession’ in the days we were locked down in that dungeon. Cold buckets of holy water, reading the same scriptures over and over, crosses and prayer beads. The branding never worked since Ann was immune to the heat and she secretly healed me every time. But oh the frustration on their faces from failure after failure was delicious -”

“-There was so much blood in that phone booth. I’ve never seen such a horrid sight. If it wasn’t for Makoto’s quick thinking, then I don’t know what would’ve happened-”

“-After we saw that poor little girl’s soul getting eaten by that Hollow, I... I just shut down for a while. If it wasn’t for Ryuji taking care of me, I don’t think I would’ve made it-”

“-Before I could do anything to stop Sraosha, All For One was killed and the fractures in my soul caused enough damage to where I... I didn't survive my wounds. If it wasn't for Morgana and Mr. Compress, I wouldn't be standing here-”

Tears. Laughter. Unconditional support and dauntless camaraderie. Not one of the Phantom Thieves judged the others for what they had to do to survive, what unfair trials and tribulations had been carved into their very beings for the sake of scraping through one more day in hopes of reuniting with their friends. What bonds and tiny shreds of happiness were sprinkled in between. How their experiences in these other worlds would shape them forever more.

And at the end of it all lay a family of teenagers who cherished one another. A sacred bond so powerful, no flames or steel or otherworldly powers could ever hope to sever them. Stronger than any Arcana Ren had ever forged, he felt his power flow into them as easy as theirs flowed back to him.

They had settled by the time Ren scooped the curry over heaping mounds of rice, the cake frosted and cut into even slices. Everyone stood to collect their plates, but Ryuji passed by his to give Ren a big bear hug.

“What was that for?” Ren asked as the others paused to watch.

Ryuji's eyes were wet, and he cleared his throat while blinking rapidly, “You know, just ‘cause.”

“I think what he's trying to say is... we're glad you're still with us.” Makoto asked gently. “Are you alright, Ren?”

“Why wouldn't I be?”

“You actually died.” Yusuke whispered in horror. “Not a falsified death like we staged that day in November.”

“You saw Akechi, too.” Haru grimaced, “That must’ve been quite a shock.”

“We all saw the aftermath of the interrogation, e-even if... if you tried to hide your injuries.” Futaba fidgeted with her fingers, “Like when we were planning on infiltrating Shido’s Palace in Leblanc, you always had your back to the wall and kept watching the door.”

“How you rubbed your head occasionally,” Anger heated Yusuke soft voice, “In the spot where that vile interrogator ground his heel on your temple.”

“The fact that we couldn’t touch you for a while or come up from behind without you jumping.” Ann stated, worry knotting her brow.

Ren’s stomach sank, “Oh...”

“We’re not putting you down or anything!” Makoto stated, waving her hands, “It’s just... we’ve seen what it did to you, even if you didn’t have to say it. And if this instance was worse...”

“It wasn’t easy.” Morgana stated.

“But I did get better, and I’m fine now. Really. Better than before, actually, so you guys don’t need to worry about me.” Ren looked down at the plates of food and then smiled at his friends, “So let’s eat and enjoy each other’s company, okay?”

Maybe it was the surety in his voice, or the strength within his posture which revealed the truth of his words that eased the other Phantom Thieves’ worries. They all exchanged glances before they stared at him again.

“Alright then.” Futaba, the little gremlin herself, threw him a lifeline, “Enough talk! I demand curry!!”

Ren sent her a thankful look as the rest snatched up their plates.

Futaba smirked as she dragged another chair for Ren at the head of the table, all sitting so close together that their elbows and plates of cake and curry touched.

Ryuji didn't wait to shove an entire spoonful of curry into his mouth, "Fbubfbjmph!"

"Care to repeat that?" Haru said, blinking several times.

"Ryuji, don't talk with your mouth full." Makoto said with a shake of her head.

Ryuji swallowed loudly, "Sorry! It's just so damn good! Way better than I remember it!"

"Yeah!" Ann beamed as she put her curry spoon down and ate a forkful of cake, "Ren!! You could totally be a professional chef at this rate! Could I hire you to be my personal cook after we graduate?"

"You sure that's a good idea?" Ryuji asked, "If you ate too much good food-"

Ann glared at him and expertly twirled her fork around her fingers, "Don't you dare finish that sentence, mister!"

Ryuji held up his hands in surrender.

Futaba sniffled.

"Futaba, are you okay?" Ann whispered. "Were we being too loud?"

"N-no, you're fine." Futaba wiped her eyes with a napkin, "I just thought I'd never get to taste Ren's curry ever again. This curry tastes like home."

Yusuke put down his spoon on his empty plate. How Yusuke inhaled so much food in so little time, without making a mess of himself, left Ren impressed.

“It’s strange...” Yusuke thoughtfully frowned at the stray bits of sauce on his plate, “Looking back now, it feels like everything went so fast, but I remember each day going so agonizingly slow that it was almost maddening.”

“Funny how reminiscing makes it seem like that.” Haru elegantly stabbed the glistening strawberry on her slice of cake with her fork, looking at it as if imagining it were Yaldabaoth’s head on a pike instead, “At least we know who is to blame, and can plan our vengeance accordingly. The more painful and drawn out Yaldabaoth’s demise is, the sweeter the final battle will be.”

She popped the strawberry in her mouth and chewed with the finesse of a noblewoman.

Ryuji gaped, “Yeah. Haru still scares the shit outta me.”

Haru giggled sweetly.

Makoto stacked her empty plates together and folded her hands on the table, “We still need to plan out the last battle of our journey.”

“... Yeah.” Morgana looked around the table, his brow knitted and head held high, “We should return to the USJ when we’re done here. We have our work cut out for us.”

Ren looked at the clock and sighed. Somehow, three hours had passed within the span of five minutes.

The next stretch of time was spent cleaning. Everyone was quiet aside from the sound of clinking plates and silverware, but it was a comfortable sort of silence where everyone basked in the presence of the others. No conversation was needed when they could finally smile or even make eye contact with each other again. A brush of shoulder against shoulder. A touch of the arm. Hell, just hearing Yusuke breathe normally as he and Ren finished up the dishes could be counted as something sacred.

They returned to Ren's room once the kitchen was spotless.

"It looks like everyone's phones are done charging." Ren said as he went to his desk.

Yusuke unplugged his and turned it on, uncertainty in his eyes, "Ah, it's been so long since this screen lit up."

Makoto chuckled at hers, "I forgot my wallpaper was set to a buchimaru picture."

"How cute!" Ann said.

"Hey..." Everyone looked to Futaba as the light from her phone lit up her glasses, "Could I try something? I'll need your phone, Ren."

Ren handed it over, "What do you want to do?"

Futaba donned her Metaverse Outfit in a flash of blue flame. Several holographic screens appeared around her and she got to work typing, a grin slowly working its way on her face. Symbols and hieroglyphics danced around Ren's phone.

"Did anyone else have server errors when we tried to text each other? And you know, remember how our phones didn't have the Metaverse app anymore?"

Haru looked at her phone, then to Oracle, "... Yes?"

"Muehehehe..." Oracle hit a certain key with finality, "Should be fixed now! I mean, as long as we are in the same world for the texting to work, at least."

Ren caught his phone as Oracle tossed it to him, the others gasping as their phones went crazy.

Not only did Ren's previous messages finally reach his comrades without the server connection error, Ren's phone flooded with old messages that his friends sent, too.

[Yusuke]

Makoto and I are unharmed for the most part, but we are weakened and in a strange place. Can anyone reach us?

...

It's been nearly three days since Makoto and I arrived, and we've not received a single word from anyone yet... Please be alright, everyone. I don't know what I would do if we could never see each other again...

[Makoto]

Please, can anyone respond? If you need help, let us know!

Hello?

...

Our phones are almost dead, so if anyone makes it here and we don't respond... that's why. Please, look for us. We'll do our best to stay here in Amestris for as long as possible.

[Ann]

Hello? Is anyone there?

I don't feel right, and I can barely hear Hecate's voice! Noir says she feels the same.

...

We finally got our phones back after so long, but no new messages?

Please be okay. We'll wait forever to be back with everyone, if we don't find a way to you all first!

[Haru]

Panther and I are alright, for the moment, but we're disoriented and weak.

Can anyone answer, just to let us know you're okay?

Just to let us know you're there...?

...

It took much time to see our phones again. When we first came here, we ventured from the forest and onto a school, but we were surrounded in an instant. They attacked when we tried to explain our situation, and our Personas were too weak to be summoned for long. The blue flames scared them and they... well, there are no proper words in high society to describe what they did.

The fact that we've received no new messages from anyone is no doubt concerning, but we'll persevere the best as we are able. My hope is that the day we see each other again is the day Yaldabaoth shivers in fear.

[Ryuji]

Hey, is everyone okay!? I woke up and found Futaba passed out by me, but nobody else is around

Anyone??

Hello?

...

Yo, Futaba has tried and tried again, but even with Prometheus our message app isn't sending to the rest of you. We'll find a way back, even if I have to go out and kick somebody's ass!

...

Nobody's responding

Just hang in there, 'kay?

[Futaba]

I can't take the silence.

All comms are too quiet...

I'm terrified. Ryuji's scared too, but he tries to hide it.

But I... I'll try my best to be strong like him and Ren!

...

No matter what Urahara or I do, nothing works.

But you know what? We'll keep trying if that means we get to see everyone again! If it means getting home and putting Yaldabaoth in his place, then I'll keep moving forward no matter what!

That's what our Leader would say, right?

Hang in there, everyone!

“You guys...” Haru placed her hand over her mouth.

Ann’s hands trembled as she scrolled through all the messages.

Yusuke closed his eyes and held his phone to his chest, “To think we were all trying to reach out to each other. It’s... as comforting as it is heartbreaking.”

“Yaldabaoth will pay for this.” Makoto spat with genuine venom as she stared at the messages.

“Damn straight!”

“Ryuji, language.”

Ryuji’s smirk was like the tip of Ren’s knife, “Not sorry this time, Queen.” He exited the messaging app and raised a brow at the glitched Metaverse App, “Why’s it all funky lookin’?”

“We don’t know.” Morgana clung to Ren’s shoulder to read all the messages, too, “It probably has to do with all these different worlds getting messed up.”

Oracle cast away her screens, her eyes unreadable behind her goggles, “Most likely.”

“Is everyone ready to go back?” Ren asked as he tucked his phone away.

“... Yeah.” Ann’s expression hardened like steel.

“I am too.” Haru said with a serene nod.

“Let us go.” Yusuke’s eyes were sharp, “The plan for Yaldabaoth’s punishment awaits!”

Makoto firmly nodded.

Ren donned his Metaverse Outfit, the others joining in a swathe of vibrant blue flames. Joker turned to his closet, which had been left open, and ventured into the Velvet Room.

Lavenza curtsied at their entrance, and touched the exit when they were all inside. They stepped into the USJ. Lavenza followed them as they descended the staircase to the central plaza.

Books, notes, roughly drawn maps, and whiteboards with equations took over the meeting.

The heroes cleared space for them, and Nezu and the people of the other worlds perked up.

“How’s it going?” Joker asked as he stood at the table, with the Thieves and Lavenza behind him.

“Well, for the most part.” Nezu stated. “We’ve exchanged a plethora of useful information!”

“But we’ve come across a bit of a snag.” Urahara said as he fanned himself, playfully smiling even as his serious eyes glinted from the shadow of his hat.

“What’s wrong?” Mona looked across the tense table.

“We’ve shared all manner of strengths and weaknesses across our worlds,” Mephisto theatrically waved his hands to the gathered collection spread everywhere, “But we always come back to one thing.”

“Where to hold the final battle itself.” Nezu threaded his paws together.

“We are not dragging it to Amestris.” Edward snapped, “Too many innocent people would get hurt.”

“I agree with my brother.” Alphonse said with a lowered head, “I’m sorry we can’t be of help in this instance.”

“Urahara’s shop is in the middle of a busy town too, you know.” Yoruichi stated as her tail curled around her legs. “And our training basement is too small for such a large scale battle.”

“I wouldn’t want anything like this to be around my normal students.” Mephisto’s eyes were narrowed, “Bringing the fight to a school wouldn’t be ideal.”

“I agree.” Nezu deeply sighed, “I could, theoretically, send all the students home and have this final battle on the school grounds of U.A. However, if the destruction got out of hand and leeched into the city, then there would be no end of trouble.”

“Couldn’t we just go to our world and fight there?” Panther asked, “I thought that’s what we’d do anyway!”

Urahara covered his face with his fan, his eyes sharpened in deep thought. Yoruichi stared at the man, her ear flicking.

“We debated on it.” Edward muttered.

“But that wouldn’t be a wise move, either.” Nezu peered into Joker’s eyes, “Not only would we have the disadvantage of fighting Yaldabaoth on home territory, but the possibility of him taking your world’s inhabitants hostage would be high as well.”

“Especially if he’s backed in a corner.” Joker clutched his chin. “It’s possible that Yaldabaoth reconnected himself to the cognition of the masses again, where he could heal himself endlessly. With his new army of Shadows, it may be way more difficult to cut him off.”

“And it’s not like we know where the portal home would lead us.” Mona whispered, “It could drop us right in front of him while he’s surrounded by Shadows! We’d really lose the upper hand, then.”

“Especially if Yaldabaoth still thinks that Joker is out of the game.” Nezu added.

“So, what?” Skull scowled, “You’re sayin’ none of you want to fight with us?”

“No, it’s not that!” Alphonse waved his hands.

“It’s just a matter of choosing the right battle field!” Mephisto stated, “None of us want to risk the overall well-being of our worlds or the people that live there, but if we do nothing, then all of our worlds will be lost. It’s really a conundrum!”

Urahara’s fan snapping shut drew everyone’s attention. “I have an idea.”

“Oh?” Nezu’s eyes sparkled.

Urahara stood, looking between Joker and all of the other worlds’ inhabitants as he tapped his fan on his chin. “We have a world where people can create anything they desire, so long as the exchange of materials is equivalent. I have a demon king who rules over time right in front of me, sitting in a world of untold superpowers. I myself have experience with traversing the realms between the living and the dead.”

Urahara slowly circled the table, his steps loud in the rapt silence.

“I’ve gathered heaps of data on everything we’ve accomplished here so far.” He looked over to the collection of Oracle’s computers by the rift, “Say I use it to create a temporary world with all of these combined ingredients. A world suspended in space and time, one that will dissipate when the final battle is over and everyone is returned to their home worlds, leaving no trace whatsoever.”

“You can do that!?” Panther cried.

Urahara turned to Joker, grinning, “I believe it’s possible to accomplish. I just need a few more bits of data before I can get to work.”

“What else do you need?” Joker asked, eyes wide.

“Data on your soul, as the World Arcana and commander of this little world hopping group. Data on the shiny new Metaverse app, and of the place between Dreams and Reality, Mind and Matter.” He cast his gaze on the Attendants as they stiffened, “With all of this data combined, and with Oracle’s help through Prometheus, there’s nothing we can’t do. When it’s complete, we can drag Yaldabaoth there and end him for good.”

“He’d be caught off guard and isolated from the masses in our world.” Joker murmured. “It’d give us many advantages we wouldn’t have otherwise.”

Nezu’s beady eyes stared at the table in contemplation, “We wouldn’t have to worry about collateral damage, both to our own worlds and to the space between worlds.”

“And it would give the element of surprise!” Mephisto grinned wide, his fangs glinting deviously, “Oh, I do like surprises!”

“Okay, and what are the rest of us supposed to do?” Edward raised a brow at Urahara, “I don’t like waiting around, doing nothing.”

Joker pursed his lips as he glanced at his original teammates, then the liaisons from the other worlds. He wanted nothing more than to wrap his arms around his family and never let go again, but if he did that, then they could all suffer greatly.

“Remember our talk with Fusions.” Kohryu whispered, “This is just another necessary step.”

“To win this war, no matter what.” Joker replied.

Kurosaki’s willingness to aid them immediately crossed his mind. If they could get others, people from every world to help fight...

“I know that look.” Queen put a hand on Joker’s arm, “What are you thinking?”

“This might be the largest threat that any of our worlds have faced.” Joker stated as he squared his shoulders as he pointedly looked to the destruction around the facility, “The attack here was just a small fraction of the Shadows Yaldabaoth has under his control, plus Yaldabaoth himself.”

Joker turned to fully face his original teammates, his expression stern to hide his nerves.

“We need more allies than just those gathered here. We’ll stand the greatest chance at ending this once and for all if we gather more people from all of these worlds.”

Noir inhaled sharply, her face paling under her mask, “Wait, are you saying we have to go back to the worlds where we were trapped?”

“Huh!? But we just got back together!” Skull shouted.

“I know.” Joker put a sturdy hand on Noir’s shoulder, “But it won’t be forever. We need the help.”

“If we’re separating willingly, just for a little while to gather much needed aid...” Queen hardened her resolve as she looked her teammates in the eye, “There’s no other choice.”

“I doubt many would believe the stories if we weren’t there to corroborate with them.” Fox nodded dutifully.

Panther took a breath to steady herself, “Okay. The next question is how will they have any chance against Shadows?”

“I’ll make gear from my Personas. Weapons, armor, accessories to give everyone a Persona’s spells or physical abilities, but we’ll need a lot of it.” Joker said.

“You and Mona told us about these items Joker, but will they really be enough?” Queen asked, eyes wide.

“Oh, you’re in for a treat!” Mr. Compress stepped up and offered his ice lily to Panther like a gentleman offering a present to a lady, “Have you ever dreamed of casting ice magic, my dear?”

Panther looked at Joker, who nodded. She took a breath and took the sparkling lily, twisting the stem between her fingers. “I feel... something. Like... like the first time I cast dia or agi, only it’s freezing!”

Mona snickered, “Focus your magic through the lily and see what happens!”

Panther stepped away and, under everyone’s watchful gazes, threw her hand out towards the flooded zone. A bite of ice nipped the air as Panther cast her spell, and the artificial lake became covered in a frigid blast that turned normal water into a thick sheet of ice.

Fox made a strangled noise, eyes nearly popping out of his skull, “What!? How can- Could any of us cast any type of magic with these items?”

Hawks smirked as he took off his ring and held it out, “See for yourself.”

Fox frowned as he gently took the charred ring, but slipped it on with another encouraging nod from Joker. He stepped next to Panther and closed his eyes in concentration, and with a flourish of his arm like the stroke of a brush, fire danced between his fingers. A licking wall of fire erased the creeping frost on the shoreline, and the deep crack of a frozen lake resounded across the USJ. When the heat cleared, Fox and Panther gaped at the line of melting ice. They stared at one another before turning back to Joker in shock.

Joker smirked, “I told you.”

“This opens up so many possibilities for all of us.” Queen whispered.
“So I could cast psy magic?”

“And I could use nuclear abilities?” Noir mused.

“I could heal without using items!?” Skull cried.

“All of that, and more.” Joker stated, “Many of these accessories have physical attacks, debuffs, status ailments, and passive abilities, too.”

“Is this really necessary?” Edward leaned forward and peered into Joker with blazing golden eyes, “Are the individual powers of these worlds really not good enough against Shadows?”

“It’s not that we doubt anyone’s capabilities or the powers each world has.” Mona sighed, “From our experience, nothing has been able to hurt Shadows aside from our Personas, or in the case of Shadows attacking the USJ, gear made from Personas. We simply can’t risk anyone being helpless here, no matter what world they come from or what their powers are.”

Edward grimaced, but hesitantly nodded.

Joker looked at Nezu.

“I predicted this might be one of the many outcomes of this meeting,” He waved a paw towards the base of the fountain, where bags of Black Items awaited, “I had miss Yaoyorozu make them for you over the past few days, while you were off collecting your teammates.”

“Everyone,” Countless stares landed on Joker as looked between the other worlds’ liaisons and the original Phantom Thieves, “Talk amongst yourselves. Write down who would be trustworthy enough to bring to the final battle, and what weapons, armor, or magical accessories would best suit them, and I’ll do my best to create the right gear before we split up.”

“And while you’re off making gear for everyone, we can teach them how to use these new powers, so that they won’t be so blind when they bring them to other worlds.” Mr. Compress stated.

Joker nodded, and everyone at the table separated.

Queen and Fox whispered with Edward and Alphonse by the tree line, Queen writing furiously with pen and paper. Spinner and Mr. Compress waited a small distance away to teach them whenever they were ready.

Panther and Noir spoke with Mephisto by the stairs as the demon stuck his tongue from the corner of his mouth and scribbled wildly on a page. Ryukyu and Hawks exchanged glances, but kept a respectful distance.

Yoruichi hopped on Skull’s shoulder as he leaned against the fountain, the two of them chatting as Skull nodded and jotted down ideas. Gentle Criminal, La Brava, and Aizawa leaned against the opposite side of the fountain to wait.

Mona stayed with Nezu and the rest of the heroes, but they were ready to step in in case someone needed help.

Urahara gestured for Joker and Oracle to follow him.

“This won’t hurt, right?” Joker asked.

“Nope!” Urahara grinned and batted his fan towards Joker, “At least, it shouldn’t. I just need a quick scan of your soul, that’s all! A few tiny little lights from my hands and it’ll be all over.”

“Right...”

“Don’t worry.” Oracle smirked, “I’ll make sure it’s quick and painless! Or else .”

“Oracle can be scary when she wants to be. I swear she learned that from Yoruichi.”

Joker raised an amused brow, "I never had any doubts." He looked over his shoulder to Panther, Noir, and Queen, "Any of the lady Thieves can be terrifying."

"Especially Noir!" Oracle chirped, "You really don't want to get one her bad side, Hat an' Clogs! She'll eviscerate you with a peaceful smile on her face."

Urahara huffed, "Women are terrifying..."

Yoruichi swiveled her head towards Urahara, "What was that, Kisuke?"

"Nothing!"

Yoruichi narrowed her golden eyes, "Futaba-chan, you know what to do if he misbehaves."

"Muehehe..."

Urahara's fan disappeared into his sleeve, "Let's get started before Yoruichi does anything mean!"

"I heard that!" Yoruichi said with a sharp smirk. "Don't make me come over there!"

Skull had a wide grin and watched, seemingly used to it.

Joker stood between the computer screens as Urahara flinched, his cheerful smile a bit too wide. Oracle's computers hummed with Prometheus and Urahara held out both palms towards Joker, glowing with a soft light. Joker felt a deep hum sink into his body.

Urahara's playful nature dropped like a stone and settled on thinly veiled concern, his fingers twitching as he took half a step closer.

"What's wrong?" Joker asked as his chest tightened.

“Your soul...” Urahara slowly circled Joker, glowing hands moving to scan different parts of Joker’s body, “It’s taken a lot of damage, and there’s so much scarring that I’m surprised you’re even still alive. How did you survive your soul fracturing like this?”

“I... technically didn’t.” Joker stuck his hands in his pockets as he looked towards Mona, “Mona had to bring me back when my body was in a morgue, if that’s any clue.”

Prometheus’ glowing markings darkened as the black flames around him curled in shame.

“I see.” Urahara gave him a thin smile that didn’t feel all that reassuring, “In my experience, a normal plus soul can’t return to its original physical body once they die. It’s only by luck that you weren’t completely and irreversibly destroyed. I don’t think even I could do anything to bring you back if such a thing happened.”

“That’s our Leader.” Oracle’s voice was subdued, “Always beating the odds no matter how slim the chances are.”

Urahara gave Joker a sharp, calculating look.

“And... how is it now?” Joker asked. “My soul?”

Urahara completed his first circle around Joker, “Mostly stable, for the moment, but there is still some lingering damage. If anything, your will to survive significantly strengthened your soul, almost like a broken bone being stronger after it repairs itself.”

Joker nodded.

“But I wonder...”

“What?”

Urahara looked up at Prometheus, to the computers, then to the heroes and their various Persona Gear, “The different magics and powers that define our worlds each have their strengths and weaknesses, but when we combine such strengths and cover for each other's weaknesses, then we can accomplish something neither world has seen before." Urahara slowly turned his gaze back to Joker, the corners of his lips tugged in a thoughtful frown, "I might not be as good at healing kido as my friend Tessai, but I'm by no means unskilled. With your permission, I'd like to try and fully heal your soul."

Joker gaped at him, then looked up at Prometheus.

"You can trust him." Oracle's voice was firm, "I wouldn't let him come along otherwise!"

Joker swallowed, but he nodded at Urahara. "The least we can do is try."

The glow on Urahara's hands intensified and gained a deeper green color, and Joker stiffened as trickles of warmth seeped bone deep, almost like settling into a hot bath after a long, hard day. It filled the tiny cracks and infinitesimal fissures left over from reforging his contract with Satanael, and Joker found himself slumping in relief. It whisked away ancient pains buried so deep that he didn't even know they existed until Joker could suddenly breathe better.

Felt... freer.

Like some unknowable weight strangling him since the beginning being lifted from his shoulders at last.

"This is..." Satanael struggled for words when the mindscape softened, "I never even realized..."

"How could we, when we never knew better in the first place?" Kohryu offered.

Urahara circled him a second time, studying Joker intently from the shadow of his hat, "How is that?"

“Better.” Joker flexed his hands and rolled his shoulder, “Much better. Thank you.”

Urahara smiled, a genuine one this time, and continued his work.

Mona and the others did their best to support him in the disastrous aftermath of Kamino, but having an expert on the nature of souls like Urahara would’ve made things easier.

But he brushed it aside, as it was useless to think on it now.

Kohryu pressed himself through the mindscape to give his support.

Urahara’s eyes widened when cascades of data took over the screens. “Can you keep doing whatever it is you’re doing? The more data I have, the better.”

Joker smirked as all the Personas in the fully healed mindscape acted. The screens rapidly filled with strings of data and numbers, and it was any wonder that it could hold so much when it moved so fast. Urahara was satisfied after a few more turns around Joker.

Next, he and Oracle handed over their phones, the data Urahara needed from the Metaverse app barely took a few minutes to extract. By then, the others started to approach and handed him the list of what gear they’d need.

Urahara gained an excited gleam to his eyes when they grabbed the bags of Black Items needed for Itemization, and several engorged wads of bills from Nezu. Elizabeth and the other Attendants dogged Urahara as they entered the Velvet Room, the man gawking at his surroundings, his eyes drinking in every detail with a hungry gaze. He hid most of it by whipping out his fan and covering his face.

“Take all the time you need,” Joker said as he shifted the heavy bags in his hands, “I’ll be with Igor and Lavenza for a while. Oh, there’s a Shadow in the cell at the end of that hall over there, if you wanted real data on Shadows themselves. Just... don't upset him too much? He's in the delicate process of switching sides."

"Understood." Urahara waved his fan at Joker, "This is so exciting! What I wouldn't give to spend a little extra time here, to study an entirely new realm-"

"Urahara!" Oracle glared at him as she knelt down and opened her laptop, "Remember we're on the clock here!"

The man sagged in a pout, "Right..."

Joker snorted and left Urahara under the watchful gazes of Oracle and three Attendants.

Igor grinned knowingly at Joker the moment he entered the central area. "The time of the final battle draws near..."

"Yeah, it does." Joker took a deep breath, "But it's not here yet."

Igor chuckled, "Indeed."

He studied the lists and planned out the executions with Lavenza.

The only world who required a little bit of everything was Mephisto's. Guns, swords and other weapons, armor, and mostly accessories that dealt with Bless or Healing magic, with a triple underlined request to have no accessories that used blue fire.

Yoruichi only requested accessories for elemental magic and psychical abilities, but no armor or weapons at all.

Edward and Alphonse required firearms the most out of all the other worlds combined, plus an inherent interest in any accessories that provided Nuclear magic. Makoto made a note on the bottom to include accessories from all ranges of magic as well, along with armor.

With a nod between he and Lavenza, they got to work.

Joker didn't know how long he spent in the Velvet Room as he checked items off one by one, only that most of the money was used up and the flash of the Electric Chair had been burned into his retinas. The assorted bags had been refilled with otherworldly gear that granted god-like strength and defence.

Even looking at the sheer quantity of everything... Joker hoped it would be enough against potential armies of Shadows.

With the help of the Attendants, they managed to carry them. Urahara gained heaps of data with Oracle's aid, grinning like a spoiled child at a candy store. Joker made a quick pit stop to his dorm to gather charged power banks from Power Loader's stash, and a few good phone chargers to boot. He tossed them in Fox and Queen's bag before they returned to the USJ proper.

The mood plummeted when he set down the bags of gear in the central plaza.

Everyone gave the original Phantom Thieves some space as Joker stood in the center of his friends. With a confident grin, he held out his hand.

"This time won't be as long. Focus on gathering allies for the final battle, and before you know it we'll all be back together again and rearing to kick Yaldabaoth's ass. I wrote all of the keywords to the other worlds on the back of your lists, just in case."

"Best to use it only for an emergency, though." Mona stated as he latched both paws onto Joker's hand, "We don't want Yaldabaoth to catch wind of our plans!"

"Hell yeah!" Skull slapped his hand on top, "We ain't letting Yaldabaoth control us any more!"

"Well said, Skull." Fox placed his hand over theirs, "No longer will we be weak and helpless against him!"

“The next time we meet, it will be for the final battle.” Queen was next. “Our very last one.”

“We’ll make him writhe in pain.” Noir set her hand softly on top, “I promise that will all of my soul.”

“I can’t wait!” Panther beamed, “We’re reclaiming our home, no matter what!”

“I’ll do my best, too!” Oracle grinned as her hand was the last on the pile, “Yaldabaoth will be sorry he ever messed with us!”

The Phantom Thieves cheered in unison.

Then, one by one, Joker escorted each pair back to the other worlds with their respective liaison, the bags of gear secure over their shoulders.

Queen and Fox crossed over Amestris’ rooftops with Edward and Alphonse at their side...

Panther and Noir disappeared into the forest with Mephisto...

Oracle and Skull were the last as they gathered up all the vital data, and Urahara gave Joker a look when they reached the absurd basement, stopping Joker in his tracks.

“I estimated how much time would pass for you before Oracle and I are done with the creation of this temporary world.”

“... How long?” Joker asked, almost hesitant.

“December 25th.” Urahara lost his playful nature, his fan nowhere to be seen as he looked Joker in the eye with a dead seriousness, “Make of it what you will.”

With that, Joker and Mona returned to the world of superheroes.

Uncertainty laced the faces of the heroes and vigilantes, looking up to the rift after Joker used the app to close it.

“December 25th.” Nezu interlaced his paws once Joker told him their time limit, “We began this operation to reunite with your friends on December 3rd, and it just changed to December 7th not an hour ago.”

A little less than three weeks to say goodbye, to train and prepare for the final battle against Yaldabaoth.

It felt like far too long and not long enough.

December 7th - Early Morning?

Joker stood in darkness.

An odd force pressed on him as if he stood several meters within the depths of the sea. But it wasn't cold or lifeless. It felt... warm, like a roaring fireplace chasing away the cold. Then, a flash of blue flickered. A single blink was all it took for figures to appear in a line before him. He didn't recognize most of these people, but the glow of the Chariot card spinning between them highlighted their array of clothes and costumes.

The most stunning was a woman with hair as black as Joker's, with a dark sleeveless body suit, yellow gloves, and a billowing white cape. A wispy golden figure stood beside her, in a vague shape of Yagi.

And then, a smaller figure wreathed in black shadows, the only thing visible was a startled green eye that was just as surprised to see him as Joker was to see this... figment of Midoriya.

Joker tried to speak or move, but he found that he couldn't.

Without looking back, he felt all of his Personas rising up behind him in this strange space, innumerable as they were powerful. Blue cinders sprinkled over his side like snow, slowly drifting over the Chariot card and into the strangers' personal spaces.

The woman simply smiled.

Aside from Midoriya, the strangers bowed in unison and spoke in one voice.

Thank you.

Ren's eyes snapped open and he sat up. He was in his bed, in his dorm room at U.A. His heart pounded as he reached inward.

"What was that?"

"I know not, Trickster." Satanael frowned, "But the Chariot may."

Careful not to wake Morgana, who was currently muttering about Lady Ann in his sleep, he slipped out of his covers and walked over to his desk. He squinted at the phone screen as it lit up, revealing that it was almost 3:30 in the morning.

Right...

They finally returned to the dorms two hours ago and Nezu ordered everyone to get some sleep. Ren shook his head and went straight to his contacts, but before he could get to Midoriya's number, his phone rang.

He rushed to the bathroom and answered it, "Midoriya?"

"Ren! Are you... what was...?"

"I should be asking you the same thing. Are you okay?"

"Y-Yeah! I'm fine... I think."

"Do you know what that was?"

"I... You remember what I said about One For All, right?"

"Yeah?"

"Those were the Vestiges. I don't know what happened. I went to sleep, and then they were there in my dreams. They showed me how All For One came to be, and then how the First passed on the quirk and then you were there. I think... they feel guilty."

"About what?"

"You know, about All For One." Midoriya sighed, "It's true what I said, that it should've been my responsibility to deal with him. Maybe they wanted to thank you in person?"

Ren chuckled, "In person' meaning summoning me and my Personas in my sleep, using the power of the Chariot Arcana?"

"S-something like that." Midoriya sputtered. A moment of silence passed before Midoriya spoke again, "Hey, are sure you're okay?"

"Why are you asking?"

"It's just... we haven't seen you in the past few days, and Dark Shadow kept saying he felt something weird every once in a while, and so did I... like a twinge in my chest? Now this with One For All. I was getting worried."

"Oh. Everything is okay, now." Ren leaned against the bathroom counter, "We were able to open the rift, and I reunited with all of my teammates trapped in other worlds."

Midoriya inhaled sharply, "You did? That's great! Are they here? Will we get to to meet them!?"

"Not yet. They had to return to the other worlds to gather allies."

"Is that why you sound so sad?"

“Part of it, but...” Ren sighed, “Midoriya, we know when the final battle is going to take place. It’s December 25th. After Yaldabaoth is defeated, that’s it. It’ll be time to say goodbye.”

“... Christmas, huh?” Midoriya’s voice was watery, but he remained strong despite it, “When that day comes, I’ll stand beside you to fight! I think... that’s why the Vestiges came to you tonight. You defeated our nemesis, so in return we’ll help you defeat yours with everything we have!”

“Midoriya...”

“A-And I won’t be alone! There are others in the class that’ll fight with you too! Kacchan, Uraraka, Iida, Kirishima, Yaoyorozu, Todoroki... A few still need to be convinced, but it shouldn’t be a problem to get them on our side!”

“Thank you.” Ren found himself smiling, “All of your support means the world to me.”

“It’s the least we could do!”

Ren took his phone away from his ear and winced at the time, “Do you think you can get back to sleep? It’s late, and you have classes today.”

“Y-yeah, I should be able to. Oh, and Ren?”

“What?”

“I... just wanted to say that I really appreciate you, and.. despite how you came to be here, I’m really glad I got to meet you. Er... good night!”

Midoriya hung up.

Ren smiled as he left the bathroom, placed his phone on his desk, and curled back into the covers. Morgana was none the wiser as he lay on his back, paws splayed in the air, now sleep eating tuna in his dreams.

Ren pet Morgana's belly and closed his eyes.

December 7th - Afternoon

Ren awoke with a start.

His mind felt foggy from the throes of sleep, but with one look at his phone for the time, it was cast away with panic. It was almost 1 in the afternoon. Morgana was nowhere to be seen.

"Why did nobody wake me up?" He threw open his closet and retrieved his tailored U.A. uniform, one ear snuggled to his shoulder as he held his phone there. The tone rang once before someone picked up, and Ren interrupted before they took the first breath to speak, "Sorry I'm so late, Nezu, I-"

"Oh, there's no need for an apology!" Nezu chirped, making Ren pause with one leg properly through his pants, "We let you sleep in."

"But why?"

Nezu hummed, "You spent nearly four days gathering your friends without rest. I figured you would take a day or two off."

"It wasn't four days for me."

Besides, just sitting around, waiting for the clock to tick down, agonizing over whether or not Urahara and Oracle were having trouble or if his other friends faced continued hardships in the other worlds...

It would be torture.

"No." Ren shook his head as he shifted his phone onto the other shoulder, finally pulling his pants all the way up and reaching for his shirt, "Nezu, we only have so much time left, and I want to make every day count. Besides, today is the first day where I help out with the hero classes! I couldn't miss that after we already planned everything out."

"... Are you sure?"

"Absoulutely."

Nezu sighed, "Very well. Lunch is already over and they have a short homeroom to do a headcount, but you might just be able to make it before they leave! I'll let them know you're coming after all!"

"Thanks." He hung up and finished dressing himself in a rush.

He dove into the Velvet Room for a quick fusion or two and to use the rest of the cash to shuffle his current stock around, then bolted from his room the moment everything was set.

"Woah, hey!" Shuichi sputtered from the couch, "Where's the fire?"

Ren smirked, "The first year hero courses."

"Are you sure that's wise after everything that's happened recently?" Atsuhiro glanced at him in concern.

"Shouldn't you eat something first?" Tobita asked in concern, "You haven't had breakfast or lunch..."

"Actually, he hasn't eaten in days since we ate breakfast the first morning we went to the USJ." Manami added.

"I ate curry with my friends, and the combined time was less than a day for me. It's fine." Ren waved them off, "I already talked with Nezu, and I'm going to be late if I don't leave now."

"Wait!" Morgana leapt from the couch and landed on his shoulder, "I'm going with you!"

Ren nodded his thanks, and they left before anyone else could distract them.

“I don’t suppose we kept that Velvet Room door in the main building?” Morgana asked as they looked at the distance between them and the school.

“Nope.” Ren frowned, but it reformed into a smirk as Fafnir crept to the forefront of his mind with a fantastic idea, “But we have a ride anyway.”

“Oh! You mean me in by bus form?”

Ren grinned as he donned his costume, and within the flash of blue cinders rose Fafnir. Joker hopped onto Fafnir’s back and the dragon broke out in a burst of speed, Morgana screeching.

“REALLY!?” Morgana yapped at him as Joker held him to his chest, “First Seth, then Kohryu, now Fafnir!?”

“Come on, Morgana!” Joker laughed as Fafnir’s bumpy gait left gouges in the concrete at his feet, “This is more fun!”

Morgana batted him on the face.

They came to the school entrance in record time, with Joker preparing himself to dismount and walk into the school like normal... however, Fafnir had different plans.

“Fafnir!” Joker wrapped an arm around the metallic drake’s neck as claws pierced glass and concrete, Fafnir ascending the wall of the school like a nimble gecko, “Let’s hope the Devil won’t be too mad...”

Steam escaped Fafnir’s jaw as he cackled, “The Devil would understand the Trickster’s need for a proper entrance to his first class!”

Morgana groaned into Joker's chest, but offered no coherent comments.

Fafnir stopped at one particular window, the glass cracking as he plunged his claws into the seam and ripped it open, ignoring the cries of shock from the poor students. Joker kept his inward sigh a secret, instead sporting a grin as he jumped from Fafnir's back and flipped into the classroom with extra exuberance.

He took a wide stance as he landed in front of the teacher's desk and waved his arm towards the students, the other holding Morgana, "We're here!"

Silence.

Somewhat familiar faces stared at him, eyes and mouths wide open in shock. Joker could feel the growing headache in Vlad King's sigh right behind him.

"Fafnir!" Joker whirled to the dragon, "You got the wrong classroom!"

Fafnir jutted his head in, his razor-bladed horns scratching the wall as he looked to and fro. "Whoops."

Vlad ran a hard hand down his face, "It's fine. We're doing a joint training session with class 1-A anyway, so you reporting to either classroom is no problem." Vlad narrowed his eyes at Fafnir, "... Mostly."

"Perhaps it's a sign that we're going to trump class 1-A!" Monoma grinned, "After all, Joker came to our classroom instead of going to theirs!"

"Monoma..." Kendo pinched the bridge of her nose.

The door opened, and they looked to see Aizawa scanning the room. His eyes landed on Fafnir's head sticking in the window, to the general damage the dragon caused, and finally landing his deadpan expression on Joker and Morgana.

“Really?” Aizawa crossed his arms and looked at Vlad, “I was wondering why there was so much ruckus all of a sudden, but you stealing Joker wasn’t what I expected.”

Vlad rolled his eyes before he turned to his students, “Go change into your hero costumes and meet us on Ground Gamma. All Might should already be waiting for you there.”

“Yes, sensei!”

One by one, the students snatched their costumes as the briefcases emerged from some mechanism in the wall, giving Joker prideful or excited looks as they went out the door. Ibara met his eyes, but then returned to the floor as if embarrassed.

“Come on.” Aizawa sighed as he turned on his heel, “I’ll let Power Loader and Cementoss know what Fafnir did on the way there, so they can make repairs.”

“Might want to tell them to fix the sidewalk from the dorms to the school, too.” Joker grinned as he walked side by side with Aizawa, Vlad taking his other side, “Fafnir might’ve been a bit too excited in his sprint here.”

Fafnir cackled again as he returned to Joker in a flash of cerulean.

Vlad deadpanned at Joker, but sighed as if he accepted that scolding him wouldn’t make much of a difference. “You remember what we planned, right Joker?” He asked instead.

“Yep. I made sure to look over the student files and everything with Nezu.” Joker’s grin widened as his chest warmed in excitement, “I can’t wait.”

“Just don’t scare them too badly. I’m still terrified at how you taught us teachers with the Persona gear.”

“Me? I would never!”

Aizawa buried his lower face in his capture weapon to hide his amusement, the cold autumn air gracing them as they stepped outside, “Whatever happens, it’ll be good for the students to learn from him. It’ll be interesting to watch.”

“Says the man who scared the crap out of his own students the very first day.” Vlad grumbled.

They passed a line of trees, their branches bare, as they turned towards the direction of Ground Gamma. One moment, Joker was smiling, about to make a playful retort, and the next he stopped stone cold as a familiar, harrowing sound of chains echoed from within the darkness of the treeline. He startled, blade ripped from it’s sheath, as Fafnir, Amaterasu, and Satanael pounced into reality. Their magic made the air crackle as they glared through the trees.

“Joker, what’s wrong!?” Morgana asked, tense claws digging into his shoulder.

Vlad King and Aizawa gaped at them. Aizawa steadily reached for his capture weapon as he studied the trees with narrowed eyes.

“You didn’t feel that?” Joker asked as he scanned the treeline, his heart pounding. “I just heard the sound of chains, Mona. You know, the sound we all dreaded hearing when we were in Mementos.”

“What!? But I didn’t...” Morgana blinked as his fur bristled, then followed his eyes. A chilled breeze pressed through the trees, the bare branches scraping together, “Joker, there’s nothing there.”

“... Are you sure?”

“Positive.” Morgana’s eyes softened in worry, “Are you sure you heard them?”

“Yes .”

“W-well, if you did then... it’s already gone...”

Joker scanned their surroundings with Third Eye, but Morgana was right in saying there was nothing to show for his panic. He dropped his battle stance, his Personas returning to him with sour and twisted well of emotions.

“Did you guys get any Metaverse readings when Joker and I were in the other worlds?” Morgana asked, Joker kept his tense posture towards the treeline.

“None.” Vlad King frowned and looked at his phone, “Even now, there’s nothing strange.”

Aizawa held up a hand, “Are you sure you’re up for a class today, Joker? If you’re still tired-”

“I’m fine.” Joker turned away as he sheathed his blade and shoved his hands into his pockets, “Come on, we don’t want to keep the students waiting.”

He didn’t see the concerned looks Aizawa and Vlad traded as Joker walked ahead, but he didn’t bother when his senses were blown to high alert at the merest hint of one of the most terrifying enemies they’d ever faced.

Joker hoped it was just his ears playing tricks on him.

Hitoshi fidgeted with his gloves for the tenth time since changing in the locker room.

He knew he didn't need to be so worried, but this would be the first time since he saw his best friend after days of eerie silence. That, and Joker would see his hero costume, and he didn't want to disappoint.

Layers of shadowy armor, both in silk and other threads, plus carbon fiber and other metals woven in for protection, made up the base of his costume. He remembered Mei's snarky comments about this layer looking like an armored ninja as she rubbed the special oils on his boots which would help mask his footsteps. Strong, yet it was still flexible and breathable to where he could move easily.

A knee-length hooded black cloak hung from his shoulders, stamped with a non-reflective gold image of a fan of cards in front of a crescent moon on his back, the entire design contained in another circle of gold. The innumerable pockets on the inside of the cloak kept all of his items and gear safe and within reach; lockpicks, smoke-bombs, small first-aid kits, any number of components to craft the items learned from both Ren and Mei.

He tugged the edge of his hood over his hair, the dark metal of his fox-like mask hidden by the black capture scarf around his neck. He idly wondered what his best friend would say when he named his mask, and its abilities, as the Persona Cords .

Still, it wasn't the piece de la resistance, the favorite part of his costume.

No, he could only smile as his hand naturally wrapped around the hilt of the dagger he kept horizontally on his lower back. The dagger Joker gave him. Something he knew would give him comfort when his best friend was no longer around. There were empty slots on his belt for guns too, but he was still training with Snipe to get his certification for those, so they would remain empty for a time.

"Woah, Shinsou!"

Hitoshi snapped out of his thoughts and turned to Uraraka, who beamed at him. "Yeah?"

"Your costume looks so cool!"

"... Thanks."

"It's true, then?" Kirishima grinned at him, "Aizawa-sensei told us you'd be joining one of the hero classes next year?"

Hitoshi nodded as he shuffled in his cloak, he felt protected from all of their stares when the front of the cloak closed, "This is just the first test of how far I've come from training, and to see how well my costume works."

Tokoyami's eyes glinted as he shrugged his own long cloak around him, "I cannot wait to see what abilities you're able to show off on this day. It'll be a mad banquet of darkness, indeed."

"Uh... sure."

He looked around the industrial zone where all the other students waited, twisting and turning corridors and innumerable nooks and crannies interwoven in a vast network of pipes. A part of him was reminded of Hatsume Ichinose's junkyard.

"Trying to steal our future classmate, huh?" Monoma said with a smirk.

"Monoma, don't start." Kendo glared at him with crossed arms. "It's not even confirmed what class he'll be in!"

"I'm just saying!" Monoma grinned as he put a proud hand to his chest, "Why, Joker even stopped by our classroom before we came here. Clearly, he favors our class over 1-A, so his protege totally belongs with us!"

Hitoshi barely bit down his squawk of surprise, "Protege? Really?"

“He what!?” Bakugo snapped at Monoma, “You’ve seen Joker!?”

“Yeah. He kinda... broke the window of our classroom and jumped right in?” Awase cleared his throat, “He rode on one of his dragons, the silvery metal one.”

Iida sputtered, his conversation with Yaoyorozu screeching to a halt.

“He scolded his beast into going to the wrong classroom,” Ibara clasped her hands together in prayer, “So he was looking for Class 1-A, not ours.”

“Ibara!” Monoma cried, “You weren’t supposed to tell them!”

A cleared throat snapped them out of their musings.

Hitoshi’s heart sank when he only saw Eraserhead and Vlad King approach with the smaller form of All Might, but some tiny little instinct told him to look up. He followed his instinct and gaped at what floated high in the sky over them, but no other student bothered following his gaze.

Relief shot through him as he and Joker met eyes, and his best friend smirked and put a finger to his lips. Things must’ve went well enough with reuniting with his other teammates, Hitoshi thought, he was just happy Joker could be here for their lesson. He’d definitely get answers later.

Hitoshi schooled his reaction and turned his attention to his teachers as to not give Joker away.

Eraserhead’s eyes glimmered with approval at Hitoshi before he swept his gaze across the other students, “Alright, listen up. As we’ve explained after lunch, we’ll be doing a joint training session between both first year hero courses.”

“You’ve said as such!” Iida chopped his hand, “But never specified what we’ll be doing?”

“A contest, of sorts.” Vlad crossed his arms and kept his stance wide, “Three rounds total, the first two rounds will be split between ten students from either class while the final round will be an all out free-for-all.”

“The first two rounds will be ten minutes each,” All Might supplemented, “And the final round will go until one of the classes win... or both classes lose.”

Whispers broke out between the students, and Hitoshi watched as Class A and Class B gave each other side eyed stares.

Someone from Class B raised his hand, “What are the rules and goals of this supposed contest?”

“Glad you asked, Shishida.” Vlad King huffed, “Joker will explain everything.”

“Eh? But Joker’s not here!” Mineta shouted.

“Are you sure?”

Hitoshi smirked as Joker projected his voice across Ground Gamma. Most of the students startled and looked up, faces paling at what the hell Joker was currently using to stay afloat in the air, sitting on it like a king on his throne - legs crossed and chin delicately resting in the palm on his hand. Morgana was curled around Joker’s shoulders like a comfortable scarf, eyeing them in amusement.

To put it lightly, it was a floating human skull larger than an entire person, with a snake threaded throughout it. The serpent’s tail curled around the bottom part of the jaw, slithering up into the left eye socket, out the back and around the top of the skull, with its hissing head somehow poking out of the other eye socket. The skull lowered itself to the ground where Joker slid off and landed on his feet, rippling colors spreading out around him.

“We’ll be playing a mixed game of tag and hide and seek. Whichever team finds me and pins me down first will win the round. If the ten minutes run out, then the win will go to me.”

Bakugo scowled and crossed his arms, “How the hell are we going to get to you if you have your friends blocking the way?”

“I won’t be summoning them for the first two rounds.” Joker smiled as he patted the skull, the snake flicking out its tongue playfully at him, “Loa here just wanted to show off, and who was I to disagree?”

The teeth of Loa’s skull chattered together in a macabre laughter before it vanished in a flash of blue.

“Oh. Th-that sounds simple!” The mushroom girl from 1-B stated. “If Joker’s going to be all alone... it’ll be easier right?”

“Especially since it’ll technically be twenty-one people against one per round?” Kaminari had a lopsided smile, as if unsure of himself.

“And fourty for the last round, kero.” Asui’s eyes glanced over Hitoshi, “Or fourty-one.”

“Don’t be so quick to discount little ol’ me. My partners may be powerful, but you shouldn’t overlook the one who commands them.” Joker’s grin gained a wicked sharpness as several students blanched, “It may seem like an unfair game of tag on the surface, but I have any number of moves, tricks, and helpful items up my sleeve! Here are the rules.” He reached into his breast pocket and pulled out a large ink pad, opened it up, and pressed his hand into it. He then walked over to Eraserhead and firmly planted his hand on the hero’s capture scarf, leaving a bright blood-red mark on the hero, who gave him a deadpanned glare, “If I touch you, you’re disqualified from the round.”

“That’s it?” Uraraka asked. “We just have to dodge around you while trying to capture you at the same time?”

Joker nodded as he snapped the ink pad closed, "That's it."

"What's the catch?" Midoriya asked, eyes narrowed in thought.
"Surely you're going to have some advantage, right? It doesn't seem fair otherwise!"

Joker smiled warmly at Midoriya, "While my Personas are sitting out the first two rounds, I'll be switching between their defences under the surface, limited to one different Persona per minute. Physical attacks, gun damage, fire, ice, lightning, wind, psychokinesis, light, dark, and the possibility of any status ailments." Joker stared between the hardest hitters like Ojima and Shishida, "Will your physical attacks get through, or will Fafnir's power redirect the blows back at you?"

They all paled while Joker continued, peering at Todoroki.

"Will any fire or ice attacks stop me in my tracks enough to where one team will be able to catch me, or will it all blow up in your faces to where the other team has a chance to get ahead?"

Joker then smirked at Tokoyami and Kuroiro, who flinched under his gaze.

"Darkness," He glanced at Aoyama, who was sweating heavily,
"Light. There are any number of possibilities open to you, but it'll be up to you and your teammates to plan accordingly. Any questions?"

Hitoshi knew Joker left out one of the types of magic available to him, but his eyes were cast over to Yaoyorozu and he figured it was probably smart to leave out anything to do with nuclear abilities.

Hitoshi raised his hand, "Which team will I be on?"

Eraserhead nodded, "You'll be on 1-A's team the first round, and 1-B's team the second. You'll get to decide which one you want to be on during the third round."

“How will the teams be split!?” Iida asked.

Vlad smirked, “Aside from Shinsou’s participation in the first two rounds, that will be up to you.”

The students’ eyes widened.

“You’ll have ten minutes to strategize and split yourselves into teams,” Eraserhead stated, “Joker will be using that time to situate himself somewhere within Ground Gamma, so don’t waste it by screwing around.”

When it looked like no more questions would be asked, Morgana hopped down from Joker’s shoulders and stood between he and them, “You are the future heroes that Joker and I believe in, so show him what you’re made of!”

Cheers, battle cries, and grins full of excitement sprouted around the students.

Joker huffed at Morgana, “Thanks, Mona.”

Morgana stuck his nose up in the air, and pranced over to sit between Eraserhead and All Might, curling his tail around his legs.

Joker went off into Ground Gamma after a nod to the teachers.

“Oi, you’re with us the first round!” Bakugo snatched Hitoshi’s wrist and dragged him over to class 1-A, “So get the hell over here!”

Hitoshi grinned as the challenge to show Joker how far he’s come burned in his veins.

Joker balanced on one of the higher pipes winding around Ground Gamma, smirking as the wind blew through his coattails.

“The first group of students are setting out,” Aizawa informed him from the communicator in Joker’s ear, “I hope you’re ready.”

“Copy that, Eraser.”

He couldn't help the sprig of excitement curling around his chest. He knew 1-A the most out of both classes, had a good number of precious Arcanas forged with them, enough to predict what teams they could make. What strategies, what Quirks would work well together to try and nail him down.

But he didn't know 1-B.

Sure, he'd read their student files and the base description of their Quirks. Saw some of what they were capable of in the blurred chaos that was the Summer Camp, but he didn't know them beyond the surface level. He barely counted that encounter with Ibara as anything significant. Their personalities, their likes and dislikes. How they could work together. What new strategies they brewed or how much they've grown as individuals in the months since the Summer Camp.

And honestly, the challenge of the unknown class excited him.

He smirked as he scanned over Ground Gamma from this high vantage point with Third Eye, watching as the two classes entered the training ground from various different points. Already, 1-A split up into two teams to cover more ground, while 1-B moved as a single unit.

Third Eye faded as he turned and hopped down the network of pipes. He stuck to the shadows and plethora of hiding spaces this industrial zone offered. His Personas lay silent in the mindscape as he kept his hearing sharp and his eyes peeled, the first and only Persona serving as his mask was Loa.

If the students could figure out Loa's weakness to Psychokinesis and Bless within the first minute of their encounter, then they would have the immediate advantage. Of course he'd cover Loa's dire weakness to light once this class was over, but for now it would have to work.

Personas with too many defences like Odin or Satanael would wait until Round 3 to have their turn against all the students at once. And he'd shuffled his stock around this morning to include Personas with weaknesses.

After all, he wanted them to have a real chance here.

If he pushed them too hard to where he steamrolled them, then they'd be too frustrated to learn anything useful.

On the other side of the coin, if he made it too easy to the point where the students felt like Joker wasn't taking them seriously, dismissing any and all potential progress they'd made, then they'd feel discouraged or insulted. And again, they wouldn't learn anything.

The first group of 1-A students emerged and snapped Joker from his thoughts. Joker held his breath as he crouched down on the pipe over their heads, his footsteps quiet as he followed them.

"Where do you think he's hiding?" Mineta asked from the back next to Aoyama.

"Dunno," Kaminari fidgeted with his headgear, "Nobody else has found him yet."

"Obviously!" Ashido's smile was forced as she marched at the head of the group next to Bakugo, "It's too quiet."

"The second a fight starts, that's where we'll go." Bakugo cracked his knuckles, "We gotta kick his smug ass to the curb!"

"Still sounds like you're jealous, dude." Kirishima said with a smirk.

"I'm not jealous, Shitty Hair!" Bakugo snapped, "We gotta show him we can take care of our own shit without his help. I won't be satisfied with anything else!"

Ashido hesitated, but nodded, "You're right. Let's give him everything we've got!"

Joker blinked at the flutter of feathers landing on the pipe next to him. A pigeon stared at him and gave off a soft coo, a few others darting around him with rapid flaps of their wings.

The group below froze and looked upwards at the commotion cause by the birds.

Joker didn't wait to be spotted, he dropped.

Mineta cried out as he found himself face planted into the ground, a blood red mark painting his back.

"Mineta Minoru has been disqualified!" A robotic voice announced across the speakers. "Please report to the Observation Deck!"

"ALREADY!?" The boy cried as Joker leapt to his next target.

Bakugo snatched Aoyama's cape and wrenched him away with one hand, the other flashing an explosion in Joker's face. Joker pulled himself into a backflip to avoid the worst of it, but Kirishima was already charging through the smoke cloud with hardened fists.

Joker laughed as he danced around Kirishima's punches, a splash of acid skirted behind them as Ashido skated over the cement. Joker was caught off guard as she threw some thin glass vials at him, which shattered over his back and left arm. His eyes widened as acid poured harmlessly off his back, but his arm crinkled as ice spread over it.

"Acid and ice don't work!" Ashido reported in her earpiece.

"Is this... liquid nitrogen ?" Joker asked in wonder as he continued his bout with Kirishima.

Ashido snickered, "You can thank Yaomomo for that!"

"Kirishima!" Kaminari shouted as Ashido zipped way.

Kirishima took a powerful stance as his entire body turned into jagged rock, “Go for it!!”

Bakugo grabbed Aoyama and used an explosion to blast them farther away.

Yellow lightning crackled over the ground and up the tangle of pipes all around Joker, but he simply smirked as it passed harmlessly over Loa’s natural defences.

Kaminari paled as his hand went to his ear, “Lightning is out!”

“Cover me, Sparkles!” Bakugo snapped as he dashed forward.

“S-sparkles!?” Aoyama sputtered, but he shot bolts of light towards Joker.

Joker cursed under his breath as he threw himself to the side, one of the bolts grazing his arm. The light burned, but it wasn’t a direct enough hit to leave him open, though his costume smoked ominously where it hit.

Bakugo’s eyes widened, “It’s light! We have 30 seconds with light !”

“Good!” Joker beamed as he wove around Bakugo and Kirishima’s united strikes, bursts of Aoyama’s light dancing through them in timed openings, “You’ve learned to keep track of your enemy’s weakness and the amount of time left. Well done!”

“SHUT UP! I don’t need your damn compliments!”

Twenty seconds...

More footsteps joined the fray as a majority of the 1-B team descended without mercy.

“Hey, Joker’s ours!!” Called a girl in a purple suit, parts of her body splitting off in all directions.

“As if!” Bakugo screamed.

A giant pipe landed in front of Joker, cutting off Bakugo and Kirishima’s assault, striking the ground twice to cause an explosion of cracks in all directions. It cut off Aoyama’s view of him while 1-B attacked.

Tsunatori Pony shot at Joker with her horn projectiles, backed up by a rapid fire deluge of scales shot from Hiryu Rin’s hands. Nirengeki Shoda and Yui Kodai stood upon the top of a tall pillar nearby, with Nirengeki speaking rapidly into his ear piece as Yui threw more large debris at him, each hit striking twice.

“GET OUT OF OUR WAY, 1-B SCUM!”

Ten seconds...

Bakugo’s next super heated explosion obliterated the pipe blocking their path.

“YOU’RE THE ONES IN OUR WAY!!” Tetsutestu Tetsutsu called as shining iron fists were dodged by Joker.

Kaminari and Aoyama screeched as parts of Setsuna Tokage’s body swarmed them, covering the wild strikes from Sen Kaibara’s twisting limbs.

“H-how is this fair!?” Kaminari cried as he tried to escape the dastardly teamwork.

Joker’s laugh bounced around the utter chaos. The 1-A and 1-B students were both in a frantic chase to get at him, while simultaneously trying to get in each other’s way. It worked fantastically in Joker’s favor.

Suddenly, several beeps and other noises went off. The students froze. It seems, given a set time limit, that nearly every student had some sort of watch or timer set to one minute.

“Well, well,” Joker pulled at his glove with a smirk, “Minute’s up, time for a new strategy.”

Loa slipped from his mask and was replaced by Cu Chulainn, who grinned at not being in the midst of battle in quite some time.

Before any of the students could react to his words, his hands darted into his pockets and tossed two small bombs into the air. The first, which Joker put up his arm to block, was a bright flash of light. Screams and cries of shock echoed as the second bomb hissed and filled the area with a thick cloud of smoke.

Third Eye cast the students’ bodies in blue auras as he burst through the cloud, handprints marking most of them. He might’ve felt sorry for Setsuna when he caught her disembodied head and threw it at Ashido when the girl was stunned out of her acid skating.

Bakugo loudly swore as Joker was upon him after marking Ashido, using a blast of heat and light to escape into the sky.

Joker stood in the center of the downed students as the smoke cleared, the robotic voice from before gleefully checking off several names.

“Disqualified students: Aoyama Yuga, Ashido Mina, Kirishima Eijiro, Kaminari Denki, Tsunatori Pony, TetsuTetsu Tetsutetsu, Setsuna Tokage, Hiryu Rin, Sen Kaibara. Please report to the Observation Deck!”

Joker smirked up at Nirengeki and Yui as Bakugo’s form faded in the distance, both of them shivering in fear.

“Nirengeki Shoda and Yui Kodai have been disqualified, please report to the Observation Deck!”

“You’ve got to be kidding me...” Jiro muttered in disbelief as she crouched beside one of the pipes, her ear-jack firmly planted in it.

“Did you really expect anything else from Joker ?” Hitoshi stated dryly despite the pride he held for his best friend’s victory over so many.

“I-I guess not.” Jiro whispered, “I don’t think it was smart to send Sato to back up the others.”

Koda wrung his hands together, “H-he wanted to go help, s-so...”

“Sato Rikido has been disqualified! Please report to the Observation Deck!”

“... Damnit.” Jiro muttered.

“It’s not completely lost!” Uraraka balled her hands into fists, “1-B lost most of their team, too!”

Koda looked at Shinsou, “Y-You know Joker the best. A-any ideas?”

Hitoshi clutched his chin, unable to feel the cold metal of his mask through his glove, “Maybe...”

A body landed by them, and they jumped as Bakugo stood fully, wiping the grime that clung to his sweaty skin.

“Great job losing the others.” Jiro deadpanned. “I thought you said you’d ‘give Joker your all.’”

“Shut up!” Bakugo snapped, “Joker was a goddamn whirlwind even without his friends.”

“Stop fighting!” Uraraka waved her arms, “Koda, Jiro, do you know where Joker is?”

The pair concentrated. Koda knelt down as a pidgeon landed on his shoulder, a small rat climbed into his extended hand.

“U-Um... th-they’re saying he’s going after the last three students on the B team.”

“Confirmed.” Jiro pulled her jack from the pipe and pointed to their west, “They’re going in that direction.”

“It’s been a few minutes.” Hitoshi stated, “So Joker probably switched Personas again.”

Bakugo glared at Hitoshi, “Any ideas, Einstein?”

“You’re actually asking me?”

“Wow, Bakugo and teamwork?” Jiro narrowed her eyes, “Who are you and what did you do to our Bakugo?”

“Shut up!!”

Uraraka facepalmed, “You guys…”

Hitoshi sighed, “I have a few other ideas. But we’ll have to work together to pull it off.”

Uraraka grinned, “Let’s do it, then!”

Hitoshi matched her ferocious expression as they ducked their heads together for Hitoshi’s plan.

The three surviving 1-B students made Joker smile.

Bondo Kojiro used his strange jar shaped head to spew glue onto the pipes and other buildings, heavily limiting Joker’s options if he didn’t want to get stuck like a fly in a trap. Ibara Shiozaki’s thorny vines covered any other exits and reduced their chase to a corridor of sticky glue and sharp thorns. On top of that, Manga Fukidashi, the student with a literal manga speech bubble as a head, used his Quirk to shoot elemental blasts in hopes of striking Joker’s weakness.

‘FWOOSH!’

Manga sent a sharp gust of wind as the trio ran ahead of their little tunnel of doom, Joker was blown back by several feet, but he skid to a stop, mostly unharmed, if not a bit breathless. Fortunately, Cerberus' familiar presence wasn't weak to wind.

"I'm impressed." Joker stated as the three stopped and faced him, all of them panting, "You have something precious that 1-A seems to lack. Sure, they have some extremely powerful Quirks on their side and they damn well know how to use them, but they don't have the level of teamwork your class has."

"We had to work hard to surpass them," Ibara whispered as her hair wriggled, "And we'll win because of it!"

Joker's vision was swamped with a wave of thrashing vines.

"JOKER. IS. OURS!!!"

They looked up as Bakugo soared over them. Joker could barely see through the small openings through the vines, but it looked as if he was pulling the pin on his grenade gauntlet. Joker felt the Tower's sharp smirk and the overwhelming pride in his voice.

"Dragon Cannon!!"

Dozens of screaming comets exploded out of his gauntlet and spread out like the petals of a flower. Joker covered his face as the vines and glue disintegrated under the flash of heat, the force cracking and breaking pipes and cement around Joker.

The last of 1-B startled and were brought to their knees as Jiro forced her enhanced heartbeat in the broken ground, while a group of frantic pigeons blocked the way to Joker.

Finally, Joker heard Uraraka's voice, "Release!"

A familiar feeling of a scarf snaked around Joker's arms and held them tight against his body, only this time it was black instead of Eraser's white. Uraraka and Hitoshi landed in front of Joker and Uraraka slapped her hand on his shoulder.

Joker grinned as he was trapped in a floating cocoon.

"Time's up!"

"Huh?" Uraraka's eyes flashed in panic, "But-"

"It seems 1-A won this round by the skin of their teeth!" All Might announced.

"Just barely." Eraserhead hummed, "Three seconds more and Joker would've won the round."

Uraraka put a hand on her chest, "I'm glad we won!"

"Congratulations." Joker said, still smiling, "You think you can let me down?"

"Oh, right!" Uraraka placed her finger tips together and Joker's feet planted firmly on the ground, Hitoshi recalled his black capture weapon around his neck.

The trio of 1-B students looked demoralized as Koda and Jiro helped them to their feet.

Joker looked at Bakugo as they collected themselves, "Was that the attack inspired by Seth?"

"It was." Bakugo gave him a wary look, "What do you think?"

"It was totally badass. Seth would be really proud of you."

Bakugo smirked, "Damn straight!"

"All students please return to the Observation Deck so we can go over the round." Vlad King muttered, obviously sullen by the loss, "Joker, are you coming back, or...?"

Joker put a hand to his ear, “I’ll stay in Ground Gamma and prepare for the next round. Don’t wait up!”

Hitoshi’s eyes crinkled in a hidden smile, “I’ll be right back to kick your ass again.”

“I’d expect nothing less from the Jack Of All Trades Hero.” Joker chuckled, “See you soon, Wild Card .”

He shot out his grapple and left them behind, soaring over the smoldering vines and charred puddles of glue in his wake. Joker took a few minutes to wander around and cool down from the riveting first round, frowning as the training grounds grew too silent without the ruckus the students caused. It made his skin crawl.

Joker returned to the highest pillar in Ground Gamma and scanned the area with Third Eye. Aizawa, the other teachers, and all of the students were barely pinpoints far in the distance on the Observation Deck platform close to the edge of the training ground. He listened for the sound of chains, but only received the dull roar of the wind instead.

“Did I just imagine it?”

“We know what we felt.” Zaou-Gongen growled, “If it was the Reaper, then you have my Strength to take it down!”

“And my swords.” Futsunushi said.

“But how would it be here?” Amaterasu asked, “Without a Red Rain or the Metaverse no less?”

“Like the Reaper follows the conventional rules of the Metaverse.” Cybele added with a snarl, “It’s the Unique Shadow of all unique Shadows, after all. Who knows what it can do now that Yaldabaoth is so strong.”

Joker pursed his lips. "Do you think visiting the other worlds attracted it?"

"It's possible." Satanael curled his wings about himself, "If it, too, was lost in that void like Metatron, our meddling may have caught its attention. We can do nothing but keep our eyes sharp and hope we misheard what was in those trees."

The communicator hissed in his ear, "Joker, the second round of students are about ready to go."

"Good." Joker stated with a smirk, "Bring them on, Eraser."

With a final scan of Ground Gamma, he descended into the maze.

"Any idea where he is yet, Shoji?" Midoriya asked as his eyes roamed over the pipes above their heads.

"None." One of Shoji's arms formed a mouth, while the rest formed ears which swiveled and swayed in all directions, "So far, he's kept quiet. I can at least hear where 1-B is going, so we can keep track if they find him first."

"I suppose that's a solid plan on his part." Yaoyorozu clutched her chin, "Joker's ability to remain undetected is quite admirable."

Ojiro scoffed.

"What troubles you, Ojiro?" Tokoyami asked as he leaned against a pipe.

"Nothing."

"Clearly it's something!" Hagakure's visible glove gently punched Ojiro on the shoulder, "Come oooooon, tell us what's bugging you!"

"Is it Joker himself, kero?" Tsuyu asked with a tilt of her head.

Ojiro bristled, "Why would you say that?"

"It's just..." Tsuyu bore an underlying glimmer within her pupils, "You always make a face whenever Joker is brought up, and since this class started you've looked angry or annoyed. You're the only one in our class that does that anymore."

"She has a point." Todoroki frowned at Ojiro, "You've been that way towards Joker for as long as I remember."

"He's a thief and an ex-vigilante, and he got away with his crimes with barely a slap on the wrist." Ojiro flicked his tail, "Someone like that can't be wholly trustworthy. That goes for him and all of his friends."

Iida stiffened, "You know, I used to think the same way before I really got to know him. My old self's narrow minded opinions... really did more harm than good."

"I did too, at the start of the USJ." Todoroki looked to the sky, "But things changed."

"Do you want my advice?" Tsuyu asked as Ojiro scowled.

"What?"

"Fight Joker by yourself." Expressions of alarm surrounded Tsuyu, but she remained stoic, "Maybe sparring with him, getting a feel for how he really is face to face, will settle your differences."

"But shouldn't we stay together?" Tokoyami asked, eyes wide.

"I don't like this idea..." Sero whispered.

"We saw what happened to our classmates who split up."
Yaoyorozu's shoulders tensed, "It wouldn't be wise for any of us to go our own way!"

“No, she’s right.” Ojiro turned his back on the rest of them, “I’ll scout around to see if I can find him myself. Shoji?”

Their classmate sighed, “Class 1-B’s entire team is heading towards the northeast, so I would avoid that direction. Anywhere else seems safe enough for the moment.”

Ojiro nodded and he used his tail to launch himself towards the pipes before they could so much as protest.

“I hope you know what you’re doing, Tsuyu.” Tokoyami whispered. “If it comes down to class versus class against Joker, team B has 11 people to our 9.”

“What’s more important: Winning one round of a single class, or making sure our classmate grows out of his enmity?” Tsuyu tilted her head as her classmates frowned in thought, “The answer is obvious to me.”

“Especially...” Midoirya’s hands balled into fists, “Especially since Joker won’t be here for much longer.”

Tsuyu nodded, “We’ve all grown as people since knowing Joker. Maybe Ojiro will finally grow out of his own prejudice with a one-on-one encounter before that mindset cripples him.”

“We could only hope.” Yaoyorozu sighed, then brought herself to stand tall, “Let’s move to the next area and do a sweep there.”

Class 1-A’s team remained oblivious to the ghosts following Ojiro.

Joker heard everything.

Ojiro was nimble and used his tail quite well in an environment like this, swinging and jumping from the pipes. Joker trailed Ojiro a good ways away from everyone else before he decided to reveal himself, using the boy’s predictable path to go around and get ahead.

“Looking for me?” Joker stood tall on a long horizontal pipe, looking down on Ojiro.

The boy stiffened, his eyes hardening with his scowl, “Were you following me?”

“Guilty as charged!” Joker stepped off the pipe, used his grapple to slow his descent, and rolled into his landing across from Ojiro, “How could I not, when I saw you go off all on your lonesome?”

Ojiro took a stance and scoffed, “I’m not surprised you used such underhanded methods!”

“Underhanded methods?” Joker grinned as Ojiro charged, and Joker ducked under the massive tail swipe that tried to take off his head, “I would call it ‘using my enemy’s foolishness to my advantage!’”

They entered a dance with both partners moving rapidly, a step here, another dodge there. Concrete shattered under Ojiro’s tail, pipes were dented beyond repair. Joker didn’t bother countering, turning the boy’s own anger against him to wear him out.

“Why can’t I hit you!?” Ojiro snapped when Joker continued to dodge with ease.

“Hastur has a handy little skill called Ali Dance.” Joker stated as more concrete shards peppered him, “It makes an enemy’s accuracy quite dreadful!”

“So I just have to wait you out until you switch friends. Figures you’d have something scummy like this instead of doing a fair fight!”

“A fair fight?” Joker’s wide, ear to ear grin made Ojiro flinch, “I see you have a strict set of morals on what you assume is ‘fair.’ That’s admirable, but at the same time that sort of blind rigidity could be the end of you... or anyone you try to save.”

“What’s that supposed to mean?”

Joker flipped away from Ojiro's last punch, and tilted his head when there was enough space between them, "How about we talk about a theoretical situation. To pass the time, if you will, for me to switch Personas so we can continue our little spar."

Ojiro scowled, watching Joker for any sort of lie, but tersely nodded. His eyes locked on Joker as the vigilante took on a relaxed pose despite his opponent's battle stance.

Joker looked up to the sky, "Say there was a teacher at school. To the open public, he's admirable and charismatic, and his athletic skills are renown across Japan enough to where the school he teaches receives immense funding for their athletic programs. Say he won the equivalent of a shiny gold medal from U.A.'s Sports Festival, he's a hero and shining beacon for those who don't know any better."

Ojiro flicked his eyes around before they landed on Joker again, "... Okay?"

"However," Ojiro stiffened as Joker's gaze turned predatory, "You find out that he not only severely abuses the boy's team, bruises and broken bones galore in the name of 'training', but he also preys on the girls. Takes them into his office on the off hours of school and does what he pleases with their bodies. What would you do?"

Disgust colored Ojiro's face bone-white, "I would tell the other teachers! Or the principal, at the least."

"And what if the teachers avert their eyes? What if the principal already knew about the abuse, but he always swept it under the rug to preserve the school's precious reputation?"

"The... the heroes and police would surely do something, then!"

"Are you sure?" Joker shook his head, "Police and heroes are paid off. Honest investigators are pulled away because the principal has a lot of fingers in a lot of pies, which includes dealings with the higher government. Parents are included in this, too.”

“Then... I... As a student, I wouldn’t have the authority to do anything?”

Joker took a step closer, and Ojiro took a step back at the cold and dark look on Joker’s face, “You’re friends with Hagakure, right? You, Tokoyami, Hagakure, and Shoji have formed quite the tight knit group.”

“How did you know that?”

Joker waved his hand, “Just answer my question.”

“Yes.” Ojiro swallowed thickly, “Hagakure is my best friend.”

“How would you react if you found out that Hagakure was called into this teacher’s office... after hours? Not a single soul was around to hear her screams for help.”

A shiver wracked Ojiro’s body, “Wh-what-”

“She drags herself to school the next day, a broken husk of a girl that had something very precious stolen from her against her will. She goes to the rooftop during class with the intent to throw herself off because she can’t deal with the pain this teacher so callously inflicted.”

“That’s... you can’t...”

Joker slowly stalked forward, and Ojiro met it with equal steps back, “You can do something about it when everyone else chooses to bury their heads in the sand. You, Tokoyami, and Shoji are the only hope she has to ever get justice against a monster that wears human skin.” Joker stopped less than a foot away when Ojiro’s back hit a wall, “What. Do. You. Do?”

Ojiro found his tongue heavy, throat closing at the horror Joker presented to him. Several seconds of tense silence pass.

“You’d continue to do nothing ?” Joker spat as a sudden anger flared in his chest, “You’d simply sit back and watch Shiho die!?”

“Shiho?” Ojiro snapped out of his fearful stupor. He looked at his opponent up and down, without the haze of anger and spite, really seeing Joker for the first time. “Wait. You... this wasn’t a theoretical situation at all, was it?”

Joker pursed his lips, “No. It wasn’t.” Joker forced a jagged smirk on his face, “Time’s up, by the way. I’ve switched Personas over 20 seconds ago.”

Ojiro didn’t move, but continued to stare at him in deep thought.

Joker sighed as he pressed a hand on Ojiro’s shoulder, a blood red mark sticking to his costume.

“Ojiro Mashirao has been disqualified! Please report to the Observation Deck!”

“Ojiro...”

A voice right behind Joker made him whirl around and shove his hand out to... nothing. Joker furrowed his brow as he felt the curve of a shoulder in his grasp, but there was nothing there.

“Hagakure?” Ojiro whispered, “How long have you been there?”

“Um... this whole time. I heard everything.”

Joker slowly peeled his hand away and stared at the handprint floating in the air.

“Hagakure Toru has been disqualified! Please report to the Observation Deck!”

“Please tell me you have a costume that’s not just a pair of gloves and boots.” Joker said.

“I-I do!” Hagakure’s gloved fists waved wildly in the air, “U-Um... th-they took my DNA to make a full body suit that’s just as invisible as me! Th-these gloves and boots are just to show people where I am!”

“Thank goodness.” Joker sighed, “Otherwise, after the conversation I just had with Ojiro, I’d be flying off on Kohryu right now for a talk with Nezu.”

She giggled before she walked over to Ojiro. The position of her gloves, boots, and ominous floating handprint revealed that she crouched next to Ojiro after he slowly slid down the wall.

“Hagakure, I... I’m sorry.”

“Eh? What for!?”

Ojiro looked at Joker with the remnants of horror.

“Remember this lesson, Ojiro.” Joker offered a softer look at the student, “It’s all well and good to have morals and set values, but the real world doesn’t give two shits about them. There are people out there who will take advantage of that and use them against you. But that’s why you’re here to learn and grow, so that there won’t be as many Shiho’s in the world. Right?”

Ojiro glanced at the place where Hagakure’s head probably was.
“Yeah. That’s right.”

Joker gave him an honest grin, “Good. You two get out of here. I have your other classmates to deal with.”

“Wait, Joker!” Ojiro gathered himself up as Joker raised a brow, “Shiho... what happened to her?”

“She fell into a coma from her injuries, but she eventually regained consciousness. With time, support from her friends and family, and extensive physical therapy, she's on her way to a full recovery."

"And... this teacher?"

Joker locked eyes with Ojiro and smirked darkly, "He suddenly decided one morning to have a... change of heart, and revealed his crimes in front of the entire school. He'll be put away for a long, long time."

Ojiro understood the unspoken implication, but his shoulders fell as he glanced at Hagakure once more.

Joker walked away.

"Joker..." Aizawa's voice trilled through the comms, "Are you sure you're alright to continue the lesson? That was... intense. The previous groups heard everything from the cameras around Ground Gamma."

"I'm fine, Eraser. It's a good lesson for everyone to learn. At least it won't be through the hard way... like how I had to learn."

"If you're sure. The time limit is half over for this round, so keep that in mind when you go off to torture the other students."

Joker gave a bright grin and a two-finger salute to the nearest camera.

"What in the world is 1-A doing?" Monoma gaped, "They lost two of their members!"

Tsuburaba smirked, "That's fine! Makes it easier for us to get Joker!"

Kamakiri hissed with laughter and other exchanged confident looks.

"Don't be stupid." Hitoshi snapped, "They still have their strongest power houses like Midoriya and Todoroki."

Awase nodded, "And people like Yaoyorozu and Tokoyami for strategy..."

"And Iida for speed." Honenuki added.

"They're right." Kendo stood at the forefront of the group, her eyes sharp, "Not to mention we still have to face off against Joker himself. We watched how he dealt with the last groups, so don't let your guard down!"

They all froze when the ground rumbled, and a pillar of smoke rose nearby.

"Uh, what the-" Monoma couldn't get anymore words out before the entire world fell to chaos.

Joker dropped down in front of them, a cheeky grin on his face despite being covered in dust, and he didn't even look surprised as he turned to them. "Yo!"

"Get back here!"

Iida was nothing but a blur trailed by clouds of dust, and Joker barely managed to throw himself out of harms way before a fierce kick from Iida soared over his head and dispelled the dust. Tokoyami, wreathed in Dark Shadow's terrible form, descended with Midoriya crackling in green lightning.

"We won't let you get away!" Tokoyami howled.

"Oh really?" Joker laughed as his coattails weaved with his movements to dodge Dark Shadow's claws, "What does Class 1-B think about that?"

The 1-A students flinched and whirled around to their sister class.

"Everyone!" Kendo waved her arm towards the fray, "Like we planned! Go!!"

Honenuki stomped his foot, and the ground between them and Joker softened like quick sand.

“No you don’t!” Great shards and towers of ice bloomed within the span of a breath, with Todoroki sliding down one of the walls. His glare was as frosty as the plummeting temperatures as a glacier rose to block their way.

“Damnit!” Kendo’s fists grew large and she began working through the ice with a snarling Shishida.

“That dubious thief led 1-A right to us!” Monoma chuckled as he ran a hand through his hair, “That’s a kind of underhandedness I can respect.”

“Shinsou, Monoma, see if you can’t find a way to sneak around. Kuroiro and Yanagi, do the same in the other direction!” Kendo said over her shoulder, “The rest of us will work to get through this to distract 1-A and Joker!”

The designated pairs broke off. Shinsou went with Monoma to the left, Kuroiro and Yanagi to the right.

Hitoshi used his capture weapon to jump to a higher vantage point, Monoma took a few seconds to follow.

“There’s only a few minutes left for the round.” Monoma muttered as they crept around the glacier, “Do you think we can pull this off?”

“If we’re smart about it.” Hitoshi stated, “But Joker’s unpredictability plays to his favor, and he’s gathered everyone together in a smaller space... nobody can go all out without getting in their own team’s way.”

Monoma sighed, “As long as we win at least one of the rounds, I don’t really care.”

The massive glacier fell in a great swathe of misty ice. The sound of combat bounced off every pipe, and it wasn't another few seconds before there was a flash of light and heat from somewhere up ahead. Dark Shadow's screech of rage coiled around them.

"Tokoyami Fumikage, Kuroiro Shihai, Yanagi Reiko, and Kamakiri Togaru have been disqualified! Please report to the Observation Deck!"

Monoma looked distraught as they finally rounded onto the battle, safe for the moment from their higher vantage point.

Ice covered everything in a thick sheet on the ground.

Sero and Asui kept to the air, jumping or shooting tape to swing from. Whenever they tried a long ranged attack to get at Joker, it was blocked by one of Tsuburaba's air barriers. Honenuki, Todoroki, and Iida were locked in a wild clash of quirks.

Midoriya and Yaoyorozu worked together to flit around Joker's movements, but thanks to Shishida's beast form and Kendo's relentless punches, they could never get close enough. Shoji currently overpowered Awase and Komori into fleeing.

Hitoshi muttered under his breath as he pinched the bridge of his nose.

"What is it?"

"You know, our teachers never explicitly said it had to be 1-A vs 1-B vs Joker." Hitoshi muttered. "In both rounds, your classes have gotten in the way of each other."

"As if we'd ever work with them." Monoma winced and rubbed at a spot on his chest, "... Maybe."

Asui jumped off Tsuburaba's next air barrier, but ended up colliding with Sero. They fell in a mess of tangled limbs, and Joker didn't wait to strike. Iida tried to stop lest he run them over, but the ice and a clever sneak attack from Honenuki's quirk made Iida trip into them anyway. The ruckus made Kendo and Shishida distracted enough to where Joker darted between them, red handprints decorating their costumes.

Hitoshi turned to Monoma and raised a brow as the robot's voice echoed over the speakers.

"Asui Tsuyu, Iida Tenya, Sero Hanta, Kendo Itsuka, and Shishida Jurota have been disqualified! Please report to the Observation Deck!"

"Joker's obviously taking advantage of the rivalry your classes have. And we're losing bad because of it. Eraserhead even said he barely counted the last round as 1-A's win because there was only 3 seconds left when Joker got captured."

Monoma grimaced, but said nothing.

Hitoshi checked his watch. Two minutes remained.

"Do you think you can get to Tsuburaba and copy his quirk?" Hitoshi asked as he began to fiddle with the dials on his Persona Cords.

Monoma narrowed his eyes as he scanned the battlefield. Tsuburaba did a good job at keeping people away from him, or preventing Midoriya and Todoroki getting to Joker. Honenuki and Awase were busy backing up his classmates against Shoji and Yaoyorozu. Mushrooms sprouted on Shoji and Yaoyorozu's bodies, but with Shoji's mask and the frigid temperatures from Todoroki's ice, Komori wasn't having much luck doing anything.

"I should be able to, why?"

"When I give the signal, I want you both to work together to form the strongest barrier you can around Joker and I. If my plan works, then we should get the win before time runs out."

Monoma dragged out a sigh, "Alright. I'll trust you."

Hitoshi waited in his hidden nook for Monoma to make his way to Tsuburaba, using the chaos to his advantage. The pair nodded to one another and Hitoshi waited for the perfect moment to strike after Monoma brushed his hand against Tsuburaba's shoulder.

Midoriya dove in for a kick that Joker danced around, ice shattering before he jumped back up into the pipes to plan his next strike.

Hitoshi sighed, "Forgive me, Joker." He spoke in a voice that wasn't his own, then took a deep breath and shouted, "AAAAAAH, JOKER!! I need help! Are you there!?"

Joker whirled around, all pretenses of the charming Phantom Thief shattering at the mimicry of Morgana's voice.

"Mona-"

Joker went still as Hitoshi's Quirk clamped down on him.

Hitoshi used his black capture weapon to swing down and, like he planned, Tsuburaba and Monoma's combined Quirks formed a thick barrier around them. Panic laced Midoriya's face, and he flicked a finger towards the barrier. The blast of air beat against it, but it held strong. Todoroki's fire was useless too, wrapping them in a veil of writhing flames.

Hitoshi grimaced as he felt the wills of many powerful beings wriggling against his control, but another presence, one who just felt like Joker, soothed them in the background. He stopped in front of his best friend, Joker's eyes scarily blank, and placed a hand on Joker's shoulder.

"Got you."

"Class 1-B wins the round! Everyone, report to the Observation Deck!"

Joker blinked out of Hitoshi's Quirk, but the smile on his face turned infectious. "Wow, good job! How did you do that?"

The barriers fell around them as all fighting ceased.

Hitoshi tugged on the rim of his hood, the other hand tapping on his metal fox mask, "Hatsume Mei made this for me. I call it the Persona Cords, and I can pretty much mimic any voice when the settings are right."

Joker smirked, "I believe you, considering you still sound like Mona."

"Right." Hitoshi turned the dial on his neck, his voice returning to normal, "Sorry."

"Don't be." Joker looked around as both remaining students gathered around, with the 1-A students slumping in defeat, "Come on, let's not keep your teachers waiting!"

They returned to the Observation Deck. Joker took his place beside the teachers as the students shuffled between their feet, trading looks and ominous silence.

Eraserhead sighed, "1-B won this round."

"Barely." Vlad King crossed his arms and frowned, "Like the first round, you all had less than a minute left, and only won because of Shinsou's quick thinking. Eraser and I barely count them as wins for the rest of you."

"But now begins the real challenge." Joker's smirk sparked dread in the students, "This third round will be a free for all with no time limit, and I won't be holding my Personas back. Do enough damage or figure out how to render them immobile, and we'll consider them disqualified. But capture me and the round will end no matter how many Personas are left. Prepare yourselves for the fight of your lives!"

Fafnir and so many other magnificent beings rose up behind him in a raging sapphire wave. Hitoshi recognized most of them; Amaterasu, Odin, Cybele, Mother Harlot, Lakshmi, Cerberus, Loa, Hastur, Futsunushi, and the deep and satisfactory bond he'd sensed only with Sandalphon.

One, though, he didn't recognize.

This Persona was covered head to toe in worn bandages, with all but one of his limbs severed from his body, yet floating in place as if still naturally attached. The man calmly twirled the curved dagger in his grasp, keen eyes flitting across the students in a cool and confident gaze, until those eyes finally landed on Todoroki.

Todoroki's eyes widened as he rubbed his chest, and Hitoshi wondered if this Persona had the same Arcana as Todoroki, like Hitoshi himself did with Sandalphon.

Joker leapt on Fafnir's back and the dragon descended into Ground Gamma, the echo of his chugging laughter making them shiver as the rest scattered in all directions.

"Joker and his Personas have five minutes to situate themselves in Ground Gamma." All Might's smaller form said, then he looked at Hitoshi. "Young Shinsou, what class do you choose to be with this round?"

Hitoshi looked between Class 1-A and 1-B.

"He'll obviously be with us." Monoma stated when Hitoshi didn't answer.

"As if!" Uraraka punched the air, "We made a great team the first round! We can do it again, right Shinsou?"

"Like hell." Kamikiri rasped, "He's ours."

“Shinsou can make the decision for himself!” Iida said, chopping his hand.

“Bullshit!” Bakugo snapped at Kamakiri and ignored Iida’s squawking protests, “He won both rounds for our classes! That means he deserves to be in the best class!”

“Oh yeah?” Kuroiro smirked, “So you admit you would’ve lost if he didn’t carry you those last three seconds.”

“Take that back you son of a-”

“Enough !”

Hitoshi winced when his shout garnered the attention of all 40 students. His grimace was hidden by his grinning fox mask, so he tried to project the confidence Joker showed off so easily. He stepped into the gap between classes, looking back and forth with hardened eyes.

“If you continue to fight between yourselves, then Joker will tear you to pieces and make fools out of all of you... again . And this time, I won’t be pulling your asses out of the fire! Joker said he’s leaving this world’s future to both classes, right? Well right now, you’ve proved him wrong by being a bunch of bickering brats!”

Many turned pale at his proclamation, others tore their gazes away to stare at the ground in shame.

Hitoshi squared his shoulders as he turned to his teachers, “If I have to choose, I won’t be choosing 1-A or 1-B. I’ll just choose... Class 1. Either we work together to defeat Joker and claim a tie, or I’m sitting out this third round to watch them all lose.”

Eraserhead sported a wide and terrifying cheshire grin.

Vlad King and All Might took a few steps away from the man for their own safety.

Morgana, who sat on the console below the screens, smiled at Hitoshi.

“You heard him.” Eraserhead chuckled darkly, “What will it be?”

“I suppose... if we can put our differences aside...” Yaoyorozu spoke first and stepped into the gap.

“... Yeah.” Kendo sighed and joined her, “We can’t afford to fight each other.”

“Being equal, huh?” Monoma smiled, “I guess I can live with that.”

Most of his classmates openly gaped at Monoma.

“Really?” Kamakiri asked, “Even you, Monoma?”

Monoma shrugged and looked away, “I haven’t really had the heart to hate 1-A recently. Anything I said today was just to keep up appearances.”

“Why?” Midoriya asked. “Usually you’re so... harsh. No offence!”

Monoma rubbed the same spot on his chest, “I dunno. Ever since Joker’s performance in the Cultural Festival, all that jealousy and hate I had just... vanished.”

Ojiro glanced at Hagakure, “... Yeah.”

“So Joker did rid you of your demons today.” Tokoyami nodded at Ojiro, “Good.”

Ojiro scratched the back of his head as his face turned red, Hagakure nudging him with her invisible elbow.

Hitoshi smiled as, one by one, both classes came together to close the gap.

A calm breeze blew through Ground Gamma, masking the faint sound of rattling chains in the distance.

Y'ALL.

We are so close to the end. One more chapter. One chapter left for the hero kiddos to get just a taste of what is to come, to see what powers they'll really have to deal with before they fully agree to help Joker in the final battle. One more chapter to wrap up some of the last interactions Joker will ever have with some of the characters. I knew for quite a long time now that once we reached the joint training arc, that this story would be very close to the end. And here we are at last, and thankfully the stars aligned once again to create the perfect update schedule.

Next chapter: Our Beginning - November 25th

Our Beginning

Chapter 97: Our Beginning

Hey, remember way back when Arsene promised to punt Mineta during the Summer Camp?

ALSO here's a playlist of Persona builds and Palace runs! The Palace videos will show some of the OG Personas(the ones who originally came with Joker to this world) while the shorter videos in the Challenge Room show the builds of our newer friends.

<https://www.youtube.com/playlist?list=PLlhgzsrNwArRNB12y01IMm5YcZiplmxFC>

I will learn how to hyperlink someday, but today is not that day.

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

“Fafnir is immune to physical attacks and I’m unsure of his elemental strengths,” Hitoshi spoke rapidly into his communicator, “Anima, try using the sleep bombs. Honenuki, if he gets weakened, use your quirk to subdue him!”

“Roger!”

Fafnir’s laughter echoed as students dodged his claw and tail swipes, “Is this all you have!?”

“N-Now!” Anima said.

Dozens of birds descended over Fafnir, dropping the small vials in their grasp. Fafnir looked up in time to receive shattering vials of sleep powder to the face, and Hitoshi smirked as the dragon stretched like a cat and nodded off, as if this were a relaxing afternoon and not a hairy training exercise.

He didn't stir as Honenuki sunk the dragon in a pit of softened earth, leaving only his head and the tips of his front claws exposed.

"Fafnir is disqualified!" The robotic voice announced, to which many cheered as the dragon faded away with blue ash.

"Anima, return your birds to me so I can resupply them," Yaoyorozu said, "Well done."

"O-on it!" Anima replied as the birds flew off in a feathery cloud.

A wounded cry of a lion came from behind him, and Hitoshi winced at the next announcement.

"Cerberus is disqualified!"

"Sorry." Todoroki's somber voice trickled through the comms, "Would... you like some fire to heal that?"

They didn't hear the Persona's reply, but the thought made Hitoshi's heart warm.

"We should keep moving." Tokoyami whispered to Hitoshi, "Joker could be anywhere."

"Yeah." Hitoshi looked between Tokoyami at his left, and Kuroiro on his right, his hand reaching up to his comm, "Yaoyorozu, Niregeki, we'll keep looking for Joker. Can you take over?"

"Leave it to us!" Yaoyorozu stated. "We'll use your information to the best of our abilities."

"Remember Cybele uses wind attacks!" Niregeki stated, "Midoriya, use your team's agility to your advantage to counter her!"

"Got it!"

"Oi! This skull thing is weak to light!" Bakugo snapped, "Sparkles, get your goddamn team over here! AUGH! WHAT THE-"

"Did it just....?" Ashigo gasped, "Did it just taste part of your soul or something!?"

Unlike Cerberus, Loa's voice trickled in, undulating in high and low tones, "Tower, youR spiRit is Quite deleCtable... We finD it TastEs liKe Caramel..."

"What the fu-"

"Um... backup is on their way!"

Hitoshi smirked as he led his two teammates into the shadows, the sounds of battle taking over Ground Gamma. They travelled over the long network of pipes like practiced thieves and masters of shadow, the darkness only disturbed when Aoyama and Hagakure combined their quirks in a powerful flash of light.

Loa screeched with clouds of smoke charring its skull, the snake hiding away in the eye sockets as it tumbled to the ground.

"Loa is disqualified!" The announcer robot stated, and screams of victory rang out from the students.

"We're dropping them like flies!" Kamakiri hissed, "We'll win this thing in no time!"

"E-easy for you to say!!" Uraraka yelled, "T-try avoiding Futsunushi's swords while flying through the air! I don't know if we can keep up with him!"

"Well, I believe Kamakiri's team just offered to back you up." Nirengaki stated ruthlessly, "Since they're free for the moment."

Kamakiri sputtered, but Awase sighed, "Fine. Let's go!"

Tokoyami shivered and pulled his cloak tighter over himself.

Kuroiro raised a lazy brow at him, "Problem?"

"Dark Shadow is concerned for Joker." Tokoyami sighed when they stopped to crouch under a criss-cross of networking pipes, "I feel every bit of pain inflicted on my partner, so I wonder what damage is being done to Joker."

Kuroiro looked alarmed.

"He'll be fine." Hitoshi said.

"How can you be sure?" Kuroiro whispered, "If hurting his friends is hurting him..."

Hitoshi sighed, "Hey, Yaomomo, Amaterasu is still in, right?"

"Yes! Todoroki's team is closing in on her since she nearly overwhelmed Bondo's team."

Hitoshi hummed, "Then he's definitely fine. Joker told me once that Amaterasu has outstanding regenerative powers, so as long as he has her..."

Tokoyami's shoulders dropped with a sigh of relief, "Good. This is just a training exercise, so I would hate to inflict undue harm on him."

"Let's focus on finding him." Hitoshi muttered. "Jiro, any updates?"

"N-none..." She whispered back, "I'm not hearing him anywhere, neither is Shoji. So either he's not moving or the fights are masking him."

"He must be staying in one spot if nobody has been disqualified yet. We'll keep scouting."

Hitoshi stepped forward, but they startled when a violent tornado ripped into the sky nearby, and another blast of wind and a huge dust cloud eradicated it. They listened, eyes wide, as specs of concrete and metal rained over them in smoldering chunks.

“Cybele is disqualified!”

Kuroiro snorted as he glowered at Tokoyami, “One of your classmates?”

“Probably Midoriya.” Tokoyami stated, “He’s been learning long ranged wind attacks with a specialized pair of gloves.”

Hitoshi snorted, and they continued onwards, if in vain. Kuroiro checked the surrounding shadows with his quirk, while Dark Shadow could stretch out and search through any nooks and crannies they could find. Hitoshi kept his eyes sharp as he found places his best friend would hide, but Joker wasn’t anywhere.

Mother Harlot was disqualified next when Ibara and her team trapped the multi-headed dragon in a thicket of thorny vines, the Persona herself throwing in the white flag with a lazy wave of her hand and greedy gulps from her chalice.

A towering skyscraper of ice trapped Hastur when it intercepted Todoroki’s team, and he was thus disqualified.

But with each Persona defeated, the more powerful ones like Amaterasu, Odin, Sandalphon, and Futsunushi inched closer together, not letting any of the uniting teams through their ranks. Hitoshi frowned when Jiro and Shoji kept reporting their shifting locations.

“Wait, aren’t we missing two?” Hitoshi asked when they circled the battles, searching high and low but finding nothing. “Lakshmi and that other one covered in bandages. Yaomomo?”

“No,” Yaoyorozu said in dawning realization, “We’ve had no reports about those two...”

“Then they must be with Joker.” Hitoshi said as he took out a small map of Ground Gamma from one of his cloak pouches and spread it on the ground between his teammates. He took out a red pencil and marked it, “Odin is here. Amaterasu here. Futsunushi here, and Sandalphon there...”

Tokoyami’s eyes widened when Hitoshi marked the circle the X’s formed, “He must be within the center, waiting for us.”

“Waiting there, when so many of his friends are getting disqualified?” Kuroiro narrowed his eyes at the map, “It doesn’t make sense unless he’s planning an ambush, but he’s going to be ridiculously outnumbered at this rate.”

Hitoshi clutched his chin, “I’m not really familiar with Lakshmi’s abilities, and I have no idea what that one covered in bandages can do. Knowing Joker, he has some sort of plan.” He looked up at his teammates, brows furrowed, “This round can still go either way.”

Kuroiro swallowed.

Tokoyami’s feathers puffed up, and his hand reached to the communicator, “Nirengeki, Yaoyorozu, how are all the teams holding up? Is anyone injured?”

“Um... many teams are starting to get tired, and switching out more and more as the final four battles are proving to be the most difficult. They’ve even gotten wise to Anima’s birds, so inflicting status ailments are impossible now.” Nirengeki explained as tremors shook Ground Gamma. “There are a few injuries, but even minor injuries will wear anyone down after a while...”

“Over forty minutes have passed so far. Hang in there, everyone!” Yaoyorozu declared.

Tokoyami gave a mirthless chuckle and bowed his head, as if already in defeat, “In other words, Joker will be well-rested. If the circle of four Personas continues to close enough to reach Joker, then it will be six powerful Personas and a fully rested Joker versus...”

“Forty-one extremely tired and/or injured students.” Kuroiro looked to the sky, “That clever bastard.”

Hitoshi grimaced, “Yaoyorozu, Nirengeki, did you hear that?”

“Yes, we did.” Nirengeki whispered in dejection.

“What should we-”

Yaoyorozu was cut off as an immense glacier rose and their hearts lurched at the small form hovering before its deadly onslaught. A bright flash of light burned their eyes, an explosion and ensuing shock wave ripped through the training ground in waves of sweltering heat and frigid ice.

Hitoshi swore when the fallout encroached, “Hang on!”

Dark Shadow burst out of Tokoyami and wrapped itself around the three of them, grunting when harsh carpets of dust blew over them. Their ears popped at the intensity of the howling gales. It drew back when the dust finally settled, and they looked in horrified awe.

The glacier took on an odd shape as a small ball of fire, a radiant sun brought forth by the Ultimate Shinto deity, melted most of it into a backwards sculpture resembling a deranged lotus flower. The mini-sun winked out of existence with a flick of Amaterasu’s hand, and she slowly lowered herself to the meteoric crater in the ground.

Many of the buildings and networks of pipes in the area were flattened in a single moment.

Kuroiro laid himself out on the broken ground, limbs spread as sprinkles of ice fell across Ground Gamma like snow, “Is it too late to surrender?”

“We’re not surrendering!” Hitoshi snapped.

Tokoyami put one shaky hand on Dark Shadow's muzzle, the other reaching up to his comm, "Yaoyorozu, is everyone alright?"

"Y-yes, there are additional few injuries, but- wait!"

"They... they're falling back?" Nirengeki said.

"Yes!" Uraraka added, "Futsunushi stopped attacking and is running away?"

"Same with Odin ." Iida stated, breathless and wheezing, "What are they doing?"

Hitoshi pursed his lips, "Going to Joker. This is our chance to rest and patch up any injuries before pushing forward."

"True." Yaoyorozu said, "The teachers haven't called a stop, and we don't have a time limit. Everyone, gather at point Zeta. We'll take a rest and form another plan there!"

"Wait a moment... I hear something in the direction the Personas are going!" Jiro shouted, "Tapping... like morse code? It spells-" She took a sharp breath, "It's saying 'I'm waiting.'"

"Okay. I'm terrified." Kaminari said, his voice higher pitched.

"Can this class be over already!?" Mineta yelled.

Kendo sighed, "There's still a chance for us to win, but it doesn't look good."

"M-maybe we should just give Monsieur Joker our surrender-"

"NOBODY'S STOPPING UNTIL SOMEBODY WINS, SPARKLES!!" Bakugo shouted.

Hitoshi groaned as he helped Tokoyami and Kuroiro into standing, "Let's go. We won't get anywhere by standing around."

“Do you really think we stand a chance against Joker?” Tokoyami asked bitterly.

Hitoshi shared a steep look with Kuroiro. “Yes.”

Kuroiro smirked, “It’s going to be up to us three, isn’t it?”

“If we combine our skills to catch Joker off guard for even one moment-” Hitoshi’s smirk shown within the glint in his eyes, “Then that’s all we need.”

Tokoyami snorted, “Very well. I’ll follow the both of you to victory.”

The sound of chains nearby startled them. They whirled around in the direction the sound came from as an... odd feeling settled over their bodies. The taste of metal on their tongue, terror singing in their souls. A cold shadow crawling over their graves. Ice creeping through their veins to freeze their hearts.

“Okay, we heard chains but there’s nothing there.” Kuroiro scowled as his voice trembled against his will, “What’s going on?”

“It... could be one of Joker’s other Personas?” Hitoshi tried, but something in his gut writhed, instincts screaming to get away, “Let’s hurry to the rest of our classmates.”

Hitoshi took his two teammates and fled from the tempest of bloodlust slowly flooding Ground Gamma.

Joker sipped coffee from a thermos to hide his pleased smirk. He sat on the edge of a circular tower, legs dangling off the side. Attis hovered behind him on his left, Lakshmi standing on her feather-light toes to his right.

“Is that genuine pride you’re feeling, Trickster?” Satanael asked.

"It's the complete opposite of what they did in Rounds 1 and 2."
Joker packed away his thermos and leaned forward, "They learned their lesson, and they learned it fast. How could I not be proud?"

"It was the Moon." Sandalphon approached from the right, the wind between his metal feathers whistling softly, "I overheard it was his idea, or else he'd sit out and let everyone be annihilated."

"Quite admirable, getting these rambunctious children to cooperate." Amaterasu descended from above with a smile on her face. She looked at Attis with pride, then turned to the warped ice lotus taking up the northern horizon. "The Hanged Man erected another glacier in the nick of time."

"I would expect no less from him." Attis nodded.

"They did much better than expected," Futsunushi chuckled warmly as he floated towards them at their back, "Such spirited youngsters!"

"Now they gather around us." Odin stood at the bottom of the pillar. He turned away from Joker in a flare of his cape and jabbed his spear forward, "It is time for the main show, is it not?"

Joker stood and gave a sweep of his surroundings with Third Eye. They entered his normal field of vision one by one, some covered in light bandages, but their expressions determined all the same.

He let himself be spotted as the students surrounded him on the ground, some standing high up on pipes, those like Setsuna's dismembered body parts, several birds, and a floating Uraraka circling him in the air.

"Finally showing your face, huh Joker!?" Bakugo grinned as all students took on battle stances.

"I wouldn't miss out on such excitement!" Joker's smirk stretched from ear to ear as his head swiveled to study both classes, "I'm impressed you disqualified so many Personas so quickly."

“This is your one chance, Joker!” Iida chopped his arms from the group of front line fighters, “Surrender, or else we’ll give everything we have to win this!”

“So confident! But I refuse.” Most students’ bodies tensed, ready to leap at the slightest movement, when his smirk turned sinister, “After all, how do you know you haven’t played right into the palm of my hand?”

“D-Don’t be ridiculous!” Monoma shouted, though his face was pale with fear, “You haven’t disqualified any of us! Even with your friends being as strong as they are, how do you expect to face all of us at once!?”

“Yeah!” Kendo jabbed a finger at him, “You’re bluffing!”

“Am I?” Joker tilted his head

Ibara narrowed her eyes as her vines crawled towards him, “Don’t you dare underestimate us!”

“Well, Lakshmi?” Joker looked at his Persona, “What do you think about their confidence?”

Lakshmi chuckled as she twirled around in an elegant dance. Beautiful lights weaved around every student, many gasps broke out as they found their strength and vitality ripped away.

Uraraka and Setsuna faltered in the air, others stumbled or knelt down as their legs felt weak, or their breath stolen.

“You know...” Joker smiled as strained expressions glared up at him in sweet defiance, “I never thought I’d use these skills. After all, I never really find myself so... thoroughly surrounded . Attis?”

Attis sliced his dagger through the air. This time the multicolored lights of a Thermopylae surrounded Joker and his Personas - brighter, sharper, colors more intense and pure - and their increased power sang through the air and pressed down on the students' weakened bodies.

Joker pulled out the ink pad and pressed his hand on it, flexing his fingers as his sinister grin intensified, "If you want to survive, then stand up and fight!"

"WE'LL DESTROY YOU, YOU BASTARD!!" Bakugo screamed before he charged forward with sputtering explosions.

Joker shot his grapple to a nearby pipe and swung through the air as the students charged under Bakugo's war cry. Attis descended with Joker as they landed beside Odin, Amaterasu and the others turned in the other directions to fight back the rest.

"Strength..."

Odin raised his spear as Bakugo shot at him, wrenching the boy away with a twist of his spear to toss him with no more effort swatting a fly.

"Speed..." Joker grinned when Bakugo's wild snarl cut off at his collision with another tower, and he sauntered forward as another rushed him.

"Recipro Burst!!"

Joker ducked under the exhaust and whipping winds of Iida's kick. Attis snapped into action with a swipe of his blade to get Iida to back off, and the earth boiled under their feet as Attis summoned a relentless pool of lava to separate them further, stopping Ibara's vines and Honenuki's quirk dead in their tracks. The warm light and intense heat waves warped Joker's wide smile into a terrifying leer.

"Defense..."

Kirishima, Tetsutetsu, and Shishida launched themselves at Sandalphon, but Sandalphon simply smiled as he held up his hand.

Pillars of light ripped apart the earth and seared them with holy light, Kirishima and Testsutestu's quirks covered their bodies as they shielded Shishida from the worst of it, but they were lined in cracks and painful breaks.

"All of these are needed for a battle, of course." Joker looked around to the chaos; Futsunushi's swords soaring through the air, Amaterasu's junihitoe glowing from the miniature sun cutting off many of the elemental quirks, to Lakshmi as she twirled around Tsuyu and Midoriya's attempts to capture her while she threw out more debuffs to them and the surrounding students. "But what really stands out in a successful battle is strategy, honing in on your opponent's weakness and taking every advantage for yourself."

Bakugo tore himself out of the wreckage, fury etched in his grime-covered face.

"Strategy, huh?"

Joker grinned as Hitoshi stepped out of the shadows of a nearby pillar beside Tokoyami, who had Dark Shadow wreathed over his body like living armor.

"I was wondering where you were, Wildcard." Joker said.

Hitoshi's hand fell to the hilt of a familiar black and white blade at his back, his other hand tapping something in his ear, "You might have weakened us and put us up against some pretty incredible gods, but you know what?" Hitoshi drew the blade as Tokoyami widened his stance, "It doesn't matter how many times we're weakened, or what unstoppable power houses you throw at us! You entrusted the fate of this world to us Joker, so no matter how many times we're knocked down, we're going to get right back up and win! We're going to prove that we're worthy enough to protect this world! Isn't that right, everyone!?"

All across the Ground Gamma, the students' voices rallied in agreement. Their willpower restored as they stood up to his Personas with renewed efforts, and Joker couldn't help the warm smile on his face.

Bakugo grinned, "What do you need me to do, Einstein?"

Hitoshi narrowed his eyes at Attis.

Odin had fallen back a ways, fending off a group of front line fighters encouraged by Hitoshi's words.

"Separate Attis and Joker." Hitoshi took a step forward, and Bakugo's eyes snapped to something on Hitoshi's back before he looked back at Joker, "We need Joker alone for a bit."

Bakugo flexed his fingers, "Fine! Just don't take forever! I'd like to win sometime today!"

Bakugo shot off with much more power than before, and Attis rose to meet him, only to be startled when Bakugo suddenly changed directions mid-air, flipping between he and Joker to separate them with a powerful boom from each hand. Joker jumped away in one direction, Attis the other, but Bakugo chased Attis with a flurry of explosions.

Joker whirled at the sound of rapid footsteps and threw himself aside when Hitoshi swung Joker's own dagger at him. Hitoshi kept stern eye contact with Joker when they danced together, Hitoshi swinging and Joker dodging the silvery arcs in the air.

Joker laughed as he pulled himself into an elegant backflip, tailcoats billowing, "You've improved so much."

"Thanks. I had a great teacher to get me started." Hitoshi flipped the dagger around in his grasp, the glint in his eyes burning into Joker, "And several after that, actually."

Joker pulled on his glove with a smirk, "I told you all that training with Futsunushi would pay off!"

Hitoshi scoffed, though Joker would never know how Hitoshi's hood hid the redness of his ears at the praise.

Tokoyami lunged from behind, and Hitoshi eagerly joined in.

Dark claws and shadows, singing silvery arcs of a dagger, the fading noises of battle as the pair pushed Joker farther from his Personas. The sound of the other battles faded as the distance stretched.

Their teamwork was seamless enough that Joker couldn't find an opening to counter and disqualify them without taking a blow. It wasn't until Hitoshi traded a look with Tokoyami that the latter finally took the initiative, Dark Shadow's bulk growing larger over Tokoyami body.

Joker frowned as Hitoshi fell back, hidden by the writhing claws of darkness when Tokoyami made swipes at him. Tokoyami nearly hit too close as Joker's buffs ran out and they were back on even playing ground. Tokoyami sensed this and pressed forward with Dark Shadow's demonic cry.

They stepped into a patch of sunlight filtering through the thick tangle of pipes, Tokoyami stuttered as Dark Shadow shrank-

Joker bolted forward, hand outstretched with an ink covered glove...

Only to be wrenched back when a black capture scarf wrapped around his arm, mere inches from Tokoyami's body.

Joker looked at the inky scarf and followed it to Hitoshi while Tokoyami retreated. Joker's guard shot up when there was a hint of victory in Hitoshi's stance, and a strange chill came over Joker's body.

"You think this is all you need to win?" Joker asked as he twisted his arm to unravel the cloth.

Hitoshi called it back with a flick of his wrist, “No.” Hitoshi took on another stance that was far too similar to Aizawa’s, “But we’ve already won. You might as well give up now.”

Joker blinked before his costume suddenly came alive, binding his arms and legs to his body against his will. “What the-”

“Now!” Hitoshi cried as he shot his capture scarf back at Joker to further restrain him.

Dark Shadow howled as it separated itself from Tokoyami and lunged at Joker. The living darkness expanded around him and trapped him in a bubble of shifting shadows. Joker struggled, but ultimately, he was trapped.

“Don’t think you can get out of this one.” A voice said, and Joker had to squint to see Kuroiro’s pale hair and dark skin... coming out of the shoulder area of his costume.

“Joker, can you move?” Aizawa asked in their shared comm.

Joker tried to shift, but Kuroiro narrowed his eyes and tightened his hold over his quirk. Paired with Hitoshi’s capture weapon and Dark Shadow’s suffocating bubble...

He relaxed, “No, Eraser. The kids win.”

“Joker has been captured, Class 1 wins!!” The robot announced to Ground Gamma.

Dark Shadow crowed in joy as it let them go. Hitoshi called back his capture weapon and Kuroiro... Joker watched in slight fascination as the student sunk back into his costume only to emerge from the shadows at his feet.

Kuroiro shivered as he stood fully, “What in the world is your costume made out of? It gave me weird chills.”

“Oh.” Joker rolled his shoulder, “My costume is a part of my soul and the accumulation of my Will of Rebellion, so no wonder it felt strange to you.” He ignored Kuroiro’s startled stare and turned to Hitoshi, “How did that happen? I never sensed Kuroiro.”

“I hid in his costume at the start, and then the capture weapon.” Kuroiro smirked, “My quirk works with any sort of shadow or black material, so...”

“Aren’t we great!?” Dark Shadow clung to Tokoyami’s shoulders, “We beat Joker, Fumi!!”

Tokoyami chuckled, “I know. Should we return to our teachers?”

Joker cast his senses to his Personas as all combat ceased. Though some students bore injuries and exhaustion made them drag their feet, his remaining Personas returned to him.

“Hitoshi, can you tell everyone to gather at the pillar I was standing on before? Cybele can heal them when we get there.”

“On it.”

Joker turned and started walking in the direction they came from as Hitoshi made Joker’s request known across their comm. Tokoyami and Kuroiro trailed after Hitoshi like his right and left hands, and they all followed Joker.

“Huh, I didn’t think we went this far away from everyone.” Kuroiro stated.

“The thrill of battle can make one distracted over such things.” Tokoyami smiled at Joker, “Especially when it’s an exciting one.”

“You got that right.” Hitoshi grinned under his fox mask, “My heart was pounding the whole time, and I don’t think I’ve ever felt... so focused on a single task before.”

Joker took the next step forward, grinning as he was about to compliment Hitoshi again-

And in the next step-

- the rippling sound of chains-

-the air tainting with dread and the scent of old blood-

-Freezes him in place with a dawning look of horror.

Hitoshi stopped, "That sound..." Hitoshi paled at Joker's expression, "Joker, what's wrong?"

"What do you mean 'that sound'?" Joker snapped, and Hitoshi winced at the intensity in which Joker stared at him, "You've heard it before?"

"Y-yeah." Kuroiro took a step back, "We... we heard it near the start of the round. Before the class surrounded you."

The sound of chains grew louder, and Joker's blood chilled when screams rang out ahead of them.

A few moments before...

"I can't believe we won!!" Mineta cried as he flopped over. "It's a miracle!!"

"Just barely." Monoma looked to the sky, "We're all beat up and I doubt Joker has a single scratch on him."

"Would it be a true victory, then?" Yaoyorozu asked, frowning.

"Yeah." Midoriya nodded, "If they won by capturing Joker, and by following the rules set out beforehand... it would be a real victory for us!"

“Who cares?” Bakugo scoffed and planted himself on top of a piece of fallen wall, “We won. Does it really matter how when our teachers already called it?”

“Agreed!” Iida chopped his arm, “And I’m sure we’ll get to see it firsthand when we return to the Observation Deck!”

Monoma opened his mouth, but froze at the sudden chill in the air. Shivers travelled up their spines while hairs stood on end. Bakugo wasn’t the only one to rub at the goosebumps sprouting on his arms.

Todoroki blinked as many eyes turned to him, but he shook his head, “That’s not me.”

“Then...” Midoriya frowned, “What’s this feeling, all of a sudden?”

Bakugo scowled when the echo of chains rattled through their skulls, and a great puddle of bubbling blackness appeared behind Mineta, roiling and rising and bursting into a terrifying form. Black ichor rained on them as the thing slowly rose like a cursed phantom from an ancient grave.

A dark tattered coat dripping in crimson and black blood, body wrapped thrashing chains, and in its hands it held two large revolvers. Its horrible wheezing squeezed through the ragged bag tied over its head, with a single, soul piercing eye blazing through the lone hole.

“What is this?” Monoma laughed as he walked right up to it, “Come on, Joker! I thought the round was over!”

Click .

“... Huh?” Monoma stared at the barrel of the gun on his chest.

A blast of bright power fractured the earth at their feet, and Monoma was sent careening into the tower Joker stood on earlier. Cracks broke the tower under the strain, and Monoma coughed and he collapsed to the ground.

“Monoma!” Kendo screamed as she ran to him and turned him over.

“Wh-what is...” Monoma coughed up red, and put his hand over his heavily bleeding chest.

“E-Everyone!” Shinsou’s voice came from the comms, flooded with panic and fear, “J-Joker says that’s not one of his Personas! He’s ordering everyone to fall back!”

Bakugo’s eyes went wide, “Wha -”

Shock and fear pranced through the group, their rabbiting hearts pounding loud in their ears as they slowly turned to look at this thing, a snarl of dust and bone creaking from its throat as it readied its revolvers.

Joker and his Personas went hard on them. Caused bruises and scrapes, some minor frostbite or burns. Small cuts that didn’t bleed much and could be taken care of within a minute of first aid. There were no broken bones or dislocated joints.

But this...

This was sheer brutality.

“YOU BASTARD!! WE’RE NOT RUNNING AWAY!” Bakugo shot off with an explosion, one palm held out while the other hand formed a small hole over it, “AP Shot!”

The thing turned as the focused blast hit it right in the face. Bakugo smirked as the demon had bent backwards over its spine, its entire head smoking and arms dangling.

Then, with a horrible wheeze and a flash of its eye, its arm moved in a dark blur. Unharmed was it by Bakugo’s attack as it aimed a gun at him and fired. A blast of wind punched him in the chest and knocked the breath out of him, and his classmates screamed when a few close to him were hit too.

Bakugo landed hard on his back and pulled himself into standing, fire and pain lancing through his ribs. He coughed at the unexpected agony, his ribs shifting in a way they shouldn't as another wave of pain rooted him to the ground.

Ashido threw a glass bottle at it, shocking the others into attacking.

Todoroki shot a stream of fire, Ashido skid around it and threw any number of bottles, the others surrounding it with battle stances.

The demon reveled in the combat as it shrieked in ear-piercing joy, untouched as it shook off fire, ice, and lightning, acid and flash grenades, barely taking notice as Midoriya, wreathed in green lightning, kicked its chest with meteoric strength. Midoriya got a gun to the face and a blast of Psy magic for his efforts.

Bakugo staggered a step forward, his fractured ribs protesting in another wave of fire as more of his classmates were being brutalized.

"D-don't move!" Koji was at his side, hand on his shoulders as their classmates continued the combat in equal painful screams and battle cries. "Y-you're hurt!"

"Hands off me!" He panted, "I have to help against that thing!"

"B-but-!"

Iida came through next, a speeding bullet train donned in silver armor. The exhaust pipes on his legs blazed bright blue as his kick generated its own wind, the attack not landing on the demon's main body, but instead knocking one of the guns from its grasp.

"Everyone!" Iida shouted as the revolver went flying, "Those guns shoot magic! If we can just disarm it-"

The demon's free hand grasped the chains around its body, and Iida's eyes widened as the demon thrust its arm forward, the chain snapping around his lower body. The demon pulled, and Iida went with it.

Kirishima yelled as the demon used Iida as a flail, knocking him against his classmates in a savage path, and any who tried to help were knocked back by silver armor. With a final cry, it tossed Iida's limp body away to land in the rubble.

"Iida!" Tsuyu's hands hovered over their Class Rep, but he was still.

"How are..." Kaminari's legs trembled as the demon hovered over them, "How the hell are we supposed to win?"

The chains wrapped back around its body, and they all felt the same dread as its remaining gun clicked. The next thing they knew, everything was white. White hot agony through their bodies. The blue sky turning white with an explosion of unrelenting power. White noise drilling into their ears as each and every hero student was on the ground, groaning in pain as their skin burned.

Yaoyorozu and Kendo had thrown themselves over Monoma, Tsuyu over Iida, just like Koji tried to protect Bakugo from the blast.

Bakugo peeled his eyes open, vision blurred, but just clear enough to see the dark demon float over Mineta. Something was different as the demon pointed his remaining gun at Mineta's head, the taste of death filtering through the air like it hadn't before. Bakugo tried to move, tried to stand as the idiot grape just sat there, gaping into the barrel while shaking like a leaf, but his ribs burned and shot through his body with lances of pain.

"Look out!" Joker descended onto the scene as Satanael burst into reality with many others, blue flames writhing around them.

Satanael punted Mineta with the tip of his boot, the student flying into Yanagi and Rin with a strangled scream. Satanael curled his wings around himself as the click of a readied gun was too loud in the sudden silence, casting death unto him.

But unlike the students, Satanael was unaffected by the spell, scowling in fury . It readied it's next attack with a bloody gurgle.

Fafnir howled in rage as he tackled the Reaper, jaws clamping down on its wrist and forcing its arm up as it pulled the trigger.

The students cried out as the unrelenting light of a Megidolaon exploded over the sky and turned the entirety of Ground Gamma into stark white and black shadows. The thrum of the explosion hit their bodies and send a wave of dust in all directions.

"Joker, what the hell!?" Bakugo spat through the pain. "What is that!?"

"We call it the Reaper." Joker wrenched Paradise Lost from the sheath on his hip, "I didn't think it'd actually show its face here."

Fafnir shook his head like a wild hound and dragged the Reaper further away from the students, Cybele dropped from the sky and slashed the Reaper's chest with her blades, her smirk bloodthirsty as oily black ichor splattered on the ground.

"Joker, what's happening?" Aizawa asked over all of their comms, "The cameras went out-"

"Tell Mona it's the Reaper! I'm engaging a powerful Shadow and ordering the students away!"

"What!?"

"WHAT!?" Bakugo shouted in tandem to Eraser's, "You can't be serious, Joker! We're not leaving you to deal with this... thing! "

Bakugo hissed in pain and clutched his ribs. Joker stared at him, and then slowly turned to see Monoma bleeding at the base of the tower, Tsuyu clutching Iida over her shoulder, of the many others who were on the ground bearing injuries and burns. Kendo's eyes were laced in tears as she held Monoma while Yaoyorozu pressed freshly made bandages on his wounds. It only took moments for the bandages to be soaked in red .

"Fine, then. Just stay and watch." Joker said, his voice firm and unrelenting.

Something settled within Joker as more of his Personas appeared and engaged this Shadow, their movements almost tinged in mania. Joker's shoulders straightened, and Bakugo's stomach fell to his feet at the unhinged rage in Joker's eyes. Even Bakugo flinched back at its intensity, hackles raised.

"Cybele. Loa, Messiah Picaro, you stay back, too." The deities seamlessly switched places with Zaou-Gongen, Futsunushi, and Hastur to appear at Joker's side, "Heal them and make sure none of them do anything stupid. Loa, you stay away because of your weakness, but see if you can't drain him from afar."

"Got it, Trickster." Cybele stated.

She swung her sword in an arc, and familiar lights of woven green threads drifted around them. Bakugo breathed a sigh of relief as the light sunk into his skin and the pain ebbed away. He would deny the inkling of relief as Iida finally lifted his head. Monoma sat up, eyes wide, as he removed the bandages despite Kendo and Yaoyorozu's fussing, to see unmarred skin.

"This is an order, from a staff member to students. Stay behind my Personas." Joker faced the Reaper with a grin, his dagger glinting, "I'll take care of him."

His coattails billowed as he stepped forward, other Personas charging around him. Cu Chulainn and Odin jabbed their spears in powerful twin blows. Hastur's tentacles undulated as countless eyes from the abyss opened and singed the Reaper's cloak with their beams of light.

Joker's fear faded in his unmatched anger, even as the Reaper retaliated with powerful blasts of magic. Whenever a stray attack, be it shards of ice, crackling lightning, or death singing on cursed or blessed magic, it was either Messiah Picaro or Cybele that took the damage, or redirected it away from them.

Whatever this thing was, it was clear to all students that Joker would make it regret showing its face and... hurting them so much.

"I don't know how you managed to get here, or why you can appear at all without the Metaverse. Did you creep through the rift when I went to get my friends?" Joker said under the gunshots aimed at his Personas, who darted in and out with claws, teeth, swords, or magic - black blood splattering in deep pools everywhere with each hit - "Maybe you're a fail safe Yaldabaoth threw in here after Metatron never reported back, or maybe you just wandered in by yourself. I suppose it doesn't matter anymore. I'll make you pay for daring to hurt my students."

Joker snapped his fingers.

Attis smiled as his passives from being surrounded by the students were still in effect, the beautiful and startling lights of a Thermopylae drenching every Persona in unrestrained power.

Lakshmi sapped the Reaper's strength with her debuffs.

The horrible screeches and thrash of chains continued when the Reaper fired off its magic without restraint. Both red and black blood oozed down its body. Buildings crumbled and many pipes and other structures were destroyed, but still Joker did nothing but move forward as the Shadow began to recoil.

Shinsou, who now stood at Bakugo's side, watched in awe when Joker's mask... disappeared when all of his Personas were present, the final being Kohryu as his great golden body hovered over them.

Weaknesses were struck, but Joker never stopped as Amaterasu floated at his back, working with Attis to heal and soothe faster than the Reaper could damage.

Fafnir, Zaou-Gongen, Hastur, Satanael, Cu Chulainn, Odin, Cerberus, and Sandalphon wove their attacks and magic together in seamless harmony, needing barely a flicker of thought as instinct directed them.

The amount of power they forced into their attacks could shatter the sky, rend the earth, make the very air vibrate and contort to their will. And all the students could do was watch .

Bakugo's mouth went dry as Joker picked apart the foe they couldn't even touch.

Kohryu, Messiah Picaro, Loa, and Cybele hovered before the students as they were frozen in place by awe and terror both.

Zaou-Gongen used Charge, and the Personas surrounding the Reaper leapt away when Futsunushi's many blades hummed with power and honed in on the Shadow like missiles. Black blood spewed as the swords skewered the Reaper, pinning its long cloak to the pavement, another through its chest, the last nearly taking off its left arm as it tried to raise its last gun in futile retaliation.

Everything stopped when the Reaper sagged down into the swords, its head twitching to stare at Joker. With one last wheezing groan, it went completely still, and vanished in a splatter of black sludge already dissolving on the ground.

Silence.

And in that moment, Bakugo didn't know if it was a trick of the sunlight, Joker and his Personas' bodies seemed to glow for a moment. A flicker of unmatched power being absorbed into their soul as the last of the black ichor dissolved, as if the demon was never there at all.

Joker looked up into the sky as a lone wind threaded over them. Then, he breathed a long sigh of relief and turned towards the students, all staring at him with an overwhelming amount of emotion.

“Joker!”

He looked back over as Mona, Eraser, Vlad King, and Yagi raced to them.

“You’re a bit late to the party.” Joker smirked, “I don’t want to say ‘I told you so’, but...”

Mona flinched, “Y-yeah, I know. I’m sorry, I...” He blinked, eyes widening, “Hey, your mask is gone!”

“My mask?” Joker reached up and felt his maskless face, eyes scanning over the Personas, “All of them are out and stable... It’s just like what happened in Kamino.”

Vlad King raised his hands, “Explain. I thought Shadows wouldn’t ever appear without that app on your phone.”

“W-well, uh...” Mona jumped onto Joker’s shoulder, “I... I don’t know.”

“The Reaper isn’t a normal Shadow,” Joker frowned as he looked up into the blue sky, “But maybe... maybe the worlds are closer to merging than we thought.”

They shriveled back in horror.

“Excuse me!” Uraraka braved past the Personas and stood across from Joker, the others hesitantly gathering around, “What in the world just happened!? That wasn’t part of Round 3, was it? That thing... it’s like it was really trying to kill us!”

“Th-that would be a rough final test...” Monoma muttered as Kendo helped him into standing, the front of his costume completely destroyed.

Tsuyu helped Iida up in a similar fashion, and Bakugo scowled as Koji extended his own hand, but he took it anyway.

Joker grimaced, "I suppose we can't just forget this ever happened?"

"Hell no!" Bakugo scowled, "You said 'Shadow', so that thing was one of the monsters you fought at the Cultural Festival, isn't it?"

Iida, Kirishima, Yaoyorozu, and Todoroki exchanged wary glances.

Midoriya's brow furrowed as he studied Joker.

Most of Class 1-B gawked at Joker or his Personas.

"HE DID WHAT!?" Monoma gaped.

"Sensei!" Kendo stared at Vlad King, "Tell us what's happening!"

Joker looked at Eraserhead, who shrugged, "It's up to you."

"This isn't how I planned to tell them." Joker muttered. "And I didn't think Class 1-B would be involved, either. Or that it would happen right in the middle of a class!"

Vlad King pinched the bridge of his nose, "When do your plans ever go as planned, Joker?"

Yagi offered an encouraging smile, "We'll back you up, no matter what. That was my promise to you, remember?"

Shinsou walked over to Joker and grabbed Joker's shoulder, his eyes crinkling in a smirk, "Same here."

"Me too!" Midoriya walked tall and proud as he stopped on Joker's other side, "I'll stand by you if you tell them the whole truth."

Joker looked at the students again. 1-A were prepared to listen to his story, and while startled confusion took over the ranks of 1-B, they watched Joker in rapt attention. His eyes slowly flicked over all of his Personas once more, and then he sighed.

“Alright, but listen up, because I’m only going to explain this once...”

December 8th - Night

Silence painted Nezu’s office in shades of apprehension and rigidity.

Ren stared down into his lukewarm teacup, his thumb tracing the delicate handle. Others were scattered in the space; Hawks, Ryukyu, and the others in Joker’s little group, Morgana, and of course Nezu himself as he continuously checked over everyone’s mostly untouched cups of tea. The most astonishing companion was Lavenza, who sat in the other chair in front of Nezu’s desk, holding Admiral Feesh.

Until finally, Nezu pressed the hidden button to open his office door for Aizawa and Vlad to walk in.

“Well?” Nezu asked, ears pricked forward as the rest stared at the pair.

“Class 1-A took it well enough.” Aizawa said as he crossed his arms, “Having Midoriya back it up was all they needed. And...” His eyes hardened, “Everyone in that class has agreed to help us during the final battle.”

Ren’s eyes widened while Nezu hummed happily.

“Then I suppose I’ll need to set aside from funds to get them equipped, yes?” Nezu said.

“Understood.” Ren chuckled, “I’m surprised you’re not bankrupt yet.”

“Oh, don’t you worry about that! Believe me, this sort of funding is mere pocket change.” Nezu’s smile fell as his gaze landed on Vlad,

“How about 1-B? They have not been involved much in this whole affair.”

Vlad King pinched the bridge of his nose, “Surprise would be an understatement, but with what happened after the end of Round 3, and with those like Midoriya and Shinsou backing it up, they have no choice but to accept the truth. They want to join in on the final fight too, because I quote Monoma ‘We can’t let our sister class do it all by themselves.’”

Morgana smirked at Nezu, “Are you sure you have the budget for this?”

“Equipping 41 students definitely won’t be cheap.” Ren added.

“You let me worry about that.” Nezu said with a nod. “The school will be just fine.”

“Well, that settles it then.” They all stared as Hawks set down his teacup and stood, his red wings fluttering.

“Settles... what?” Ren asked.

Hawks exchanged a heavy look between Gang Orca and the others, then he stepped up to Nezu’s desk, pausing at Ren’s side.

“We’re staying here to help train the students, of course!”

“Eh?” Morgana blinked at him in bewilderment, “But what about all that stuff you said before about keeping the peace with the public?”

Hawks’ gaze fell to Ren, who was surprised at the guilt in the man’s expression. “Look,” A vibrant crimson wing wrapped around Ren and Morgana, the pair falling further in surprise as they were held with such care and strength, “We barely have two weeks. Two weeks . I don’t want to miss out on the little time we have left together.”

“We were late to the party when you opened the rift to get your friends and we didn’t even know what happened today until after the fact.” Ryukyu leaned back on the couch with crossed arms, “Even if we have a set date for the final battle, we can’t allow something like the Reaper to happen again between now and then.”

Gang Orca nodded, “We’ll be here for you until the end.”

Ren smiled at that.

“Don’t worry about the public.” Tensei grinned as he looked between Best Jeanist and Hawks, “We’ve decided to coordinate our agencies with one another, so we have enough sidekicks to go around.”

Hawks snorted, “Kagome is certainly fired up about it.”

Nezu threaded his paws together and pinned his interest on Lavenza, who had yet to speak, “The aid to train all the students is appreciated. However, it is a question if the Reaper will be a returning danger or not. It did not, in fact, breach any of the sensors we had in place. And with the rift currently closed...”

“The Reaper is... unique.” Lavenza turned in her seat to stare at all of them in turn, hugging Admiral Feesh to her chest, “It has stalked Wild Cards of the past throughout their journeys. It is a Shadow compelled by madness and hatred, and knows no master. A living embodiment of death... though we know not if it is a means to challenge the Wild Cards themselves, or if it serves some other purpose.”

“So it wasn’t under Yaldabaoth’s orders?” Morgana asked incredulously, “It was just here by freak accident?”

“It would seem that way. It may have hid itself away while we had the rift open while the Trickster retrieved the others.” Lavenza dipped her head, “I apologize for not detecting it before it was so close to your students.”

Morgana’s ears drooped, “Even I didn’t sense it before it was right there .”

“Another reason for us all to be wary, then.” Nezu said, “I’ll gladly accept the assistance that Hawks and the others are offering until the final battle, if not to add to the number of eyes and ears we have on hand.”

Miruko smirked, “Damn straight! I’ll kick that thing’s ass if it thinks it can ever show it’s ugly face here again!”

“Well, someone’s excited.” Best Jeanist remarked with a hint of a smile showing in his eyes.

Nezu cleared his throat, “If that’s everything, I believe this meeting should be dismissed. It is late after all.”

The heroes exchanged glances, but with mutual nods they vacated the room. Hawks’ wing gave Ren and Morgana on least gentle squeeze before the blanket of feathers was pulled back.

Lavenza set Admiral Feesh on his chair and curtsied before she too, left to return to the dorms. More specifically, the Velvet Room in his dorm.

“Oh, and Ren?”

Ren hesitated after he stood, blinking at Nezu, “Yes?”

“I was thinking of bringing Endeavor into the fold of those who know the truth.” Nezu leaned forward, “He is one of your Arcanas, yes? His power would help even the odds against us.”

Ren exchanged a quick glance with Morgana, “I don’t see why not. We’ll think about what Persona gear would fit his skill set the best.”

“Very well! Leave it to me to inform him.” Nezu turned to his computer, grinning as he typed away, so they decided to flee while they still had the chance.

“Talk about a busy day, huh?” Morgana stretched over Ren’s shoulders before relaxing with a long sigh.

“Understatement.” Another voice deadpanned.

Ren stopped in the corner of the hallway, the both of them gaping at Aizawa leaning against the wall.

Ren looked further down the hallway where the sweep of Hawks' wings disappeared, then back to Aizawa, “You’re not walking with the others?”

“I asked them to go ahead when they saw you weren’t following immediately.” Aizawa frowned, “I... want to talk to you, Ren. Alone. If that’s alright.”

Morgana jumped off his shoulders when he nodded, tip of his tail dancing back and forth, “I’ll let the others know. But don’t stay out too long or it’ll affect your sleep!”

Ren huffed, then he turned to Aizawa with a raised brow, “Why did you want to speak with me?”

“Not here.” Aizawa pulled himself from the wall and began walking down the hall, “Come with me.”

Ren held his curiosity as he did so, following after Aizawa as they stepped out into the chilled night air. They turned their backs to the school, the dorms, the various forests and gardens around the campus. Ren’s eyes went wide when the gate leading to the outside came into view.

“We’re... leaving? Is that a good idea after what just happened?”

“Just for a little bit.” Aizawa tucked his face further into his capture weapon and refused to look Ren in the eye, “There’s one spot in particular where I want to have this talk.”

Ren frowned, but he nodded, “Lead the way, then.”

Aizawa walked on, and they only made it one street when Aizawa stopped him. “You might want to don your costume for this.”

“What-”

Aizawa threw his capture weapon somewhere into the rooftops, and leapt.

Ren looked around. They were alone, nobody would be around to see, but still...

He shook his head, donned his costume with a flaming blue flourish, and met Aizawa on the rooftop after the zip of his grappling hook.

“Are you sure this is a good idea?” Joker flexed his wrist as he tinkered with the grappling hook, “If we get caught-”

“We’re good enough that nobody would see us. Besides, it’s too cold for many people to be out, even villains.” He reached up to his capture weapon, “If we do encounter any trouble out here, just leave it to me.”

Joker waved a gloved hand, “If you wish.”

Aizawa shuffled on his feet, waiting as if expecting Joker to speak more, “You’re not going to ask where we’re going?”

“Nah.” Joker stepped up next to Aizawa, grinning, “I trust you.”

A look in Aizawa's eye came and went so fast that Joker couldn't decipher it before the man turned away, “Alright. Let's go.”

Aizawa jumped to the next rooftop with Joker not far behind. A certain... peace came over them as they traversed over the streets and sidewalks like flitting shadows, over the tiny handful of people huddling in jackets and coats as the temperature continued to fall. Joker couldn't see any stars, and the pervading chill made itself known by the white ghostly mist leaving his lips. Thankfully, Satanael and a few others had resistances to ice, so he wasn't too cold. Aizawa didn't seem bothered, either.

Joker hadn't patrolled Musutafu in several months, so exploring the city in the depths of biting frost was an entirely different ballgame to the warmth or humidity of spring and summer. Still, the exercise and freedom brought a smile to his face.

Aizawa, however, seemed focused on finding something. Too focused. He'd stop occasionally and look around before switching directions. At first, Joker paid it no mind, just enjoying the sensation of running across rooftops again, and with the unexpected company of a man who started off as an enemy and wormed his way into one of his most valued and trusted confidants.

It wasn't until Aizawa stopped a good distance away from the harbor that Joker understood. Joker frowned at the warehouses across the dark water from them, and comprehension dawned when Aizawa stared at these warehouses with bare hints of pain in his expression.

"It is rebuilt," Kohryu whispered softly, "but this is where the raid happened."

The other Personas in the mindscape, the ones who had yet to exist when the raid occurred, shifted at the memory of the great battle, of the hurricane Kohryu called down to cover Joker's escape. And of the pain thereafter. Though this wound had long since healed, the mental scar pulled with uncertainty.

Joker's chest tightened, but he said nothing as Aizawa turned and led them back into the city. A new weight settled in Joker as he watched Aizawa more carefully. The next time Aizawa stopped was when he hesitated at the lip of the rooftop and looked down, the cold wind whispering a memory of 'give them back!' when Joker recognized this particular alley.

Joker nudged the man's shoulder when he was lost in thought, "Aizawa..."

"One more spot." Aizawa turned away.

Joker bit back his confusion and followed. They spent another ten minutes hopping between buildings in silence before a vaguely familiar building came into view, the perfect setting to sit and look across the city bathed in darkness and twinkling lights. The cold crafted a subdued mask to keep much of the noise at bay, draping them in an isolated veil of gold.

The place where Joker offered Aizawa a truce, and the long-earned forgiveness necessary for them to work together at the Summer Camp.

Aizawa finally stopped when they reached this rooftop, and turned to toss something at Joker.

Joker blinked at the small thermos in his hand, wrapped around it was a rolled up piece of paper tied in cord. "What's this?"

Aizawa huffed, "Coffee I made."

"It's not going to be burnt, is it?"

The man deadpanned at Joker's teasing grin, "Just try it."

"Alright." Joker popped off the cap, poured some of the still-steaming liquid in it, and brought it to his lips. It was pleasant and smooth, and not at all like the failure that was Aizawa's first attempt. Surprise made his eyes widen at the seamless balance of chocolate and nutty notes at the end. "Wow. This is actually pretty good."

Aizawa nodded at the paper tied to the thermos, "That paper on there is the blend I came up with. It took me ages to get it right."

"When did you even have time to practice?" Joker said as he replaced the cap and studied Aizawa's recipe.

"Please," Aizawa crossed his arms and looked out to the city lights, "I teach all day and mostly patrol at night. Most of the sleep I manage is from snatching it here and there throughout the day, so believe me when I say I know how to make time when necessary.”

Joker smiled, “It’s really good.” He raised a brow. “But did we really need to come all the way out here, and... in this place in particular, just for me to try your coffee?”

Aizawa stilled. Then, he heaved a long sigh and sat at the edge of the rooftop. Joker went to sit next to him, the thermos sitting between them.

“I still remember your favorite coffee blend.” Aizawa’s cool gaze searched the city, “I figured it’d only be fair if you had a recipe I created, so that whenever we have these blends, no matter where we are or what we’re doing, however much time has passed since we had to say goodbye...” Aizawa turned to look at Joker with unprecedented amounts of softness, “We’ll always remember each other. Just... for everything you’ve done, Joker, thank you.”

Joker pushed past the volcanic warmth in his chest, the ball in his throat, and the way his eyes watered so quickly. He forced a grin as he unraveled the recipe and studied it again with a new intensity. “I’ll be sure to treasure it. Hell, I could ask Boss to put this up on the menu board in Leblanc.”

“Really?”

“Yup!” Joker gave Aizawa his cheekiest grin, “We could call it the ‘Grumpy Cat Blend!’”

Aizawa scoffed as he ruffled Joker’s hair, “Brat.”

Joker laughed at the warmth and fondness in Aizawa’s tone, completely the opposite of the frigid air around them. He made a point to reach into his breast pocket, pulling out Kaito’s family crest carefully tucked within Eri’s drawing. Joker smoothed out the recipe paper as best as he was able, and placed it with them before tucking all three items next to his heart.

Aizawa watched with a glimmer to his suspiciously wet eyes and a rare, honest smile on his face.

Maybe Joker should find a way to keep Bakugo's modified Seth figurine in his costume too, if to keep these items all as close together as possible. Or any number of precious gifts or mementos his other Confidants could bestow in the dwindling time they had left.

Joker blinked as something white flickered across his view.

"It's snowing." Aizawa said as they looked up into the dark heavens, "Really, now of all times."

Joker watched as large snowflakes slowly weaved through the air on calm breezes, absorbing the city lights en masse until Musutafu practically glowed with a white and gold aura. He held out his hand to let a snowflake land on it, absorbing the intricate and beautiful shape until it melted into a dot of water on his glove.

"We should get back before we're covered in this stuff." Aizawa stated as he stood up, specks of snow dotting his black costume.

"What, no waiting around for a snowball tournament?" Joker teased, "Afraid you're going to lose?"

"As if." Aizawa rolled his eyes, "We've been out long enough, and I don't want us getting sick."

"If you say so." Joker hid his smirk as he swept up the thermos, and they headed off towards U.A. in a mystical wonderland of glittering gold.

Ren savored the lingering taste of coffee long after they returned.

December 9 th - Morning

“-And then Joker swooped in and totally kicked its ass while the rest of us watched, too amazed at his badassery to even move.”

“Geez.” Ren ran a hand through his hair, “Hitoshi makes it sound like I wasn’t terrified of it at first. Or the injuries. Or if I got there even seconds later, Mineta would’ve-”

“Hey,” Hitoshi nudged him, “Everyone’s fine. So don’t stress too much about it.”

“I’m just glad everyone came out of it okay.” Risumi smiled as she refilled their cups of tea, one hand resting on her rounded belly. Ren was too out of it to pay attention the last time he saw her, but Risumi was practically radiant, “We noticed Ectoplasm clones and those little robots patrolling more often. And I know I’ve seen red feathers flying here and there. Is that why?”

Ren nodded. “I don’t think it’ll come back, but it’s better to be safe than sorry.”

Ayumu hummed as he snatched one of the sugar cookies off the plate in the center of the table, “How did your previous visit to the USJ go? Hitoshi didn’t tell us anything, but we know you’ve been gone for days.”

“Ah, it went... relatively well. I reunited with my friends and everyone is working with the other worlds to get allies for the final battle.” Ren frowned, looking at Risumi’s belly before his eyes went to the floor.

“What is it?” Risumi leaned forward, “Don’t think I can’t handle a bit of bad news just because of my condition.”

Ren swallowed. “The date for the final battle is scheduled for December 25th. That’s... that’ll be the day we’ll have to say goodbye for good.”

Ayumu stilled, eyes sad but accepting.

Risumi teared up, but she held it back with her herculean inner strength, "I see. Then we just have to make every day count then, don't we?"

Ren snorted, "That's what I told Nezu."

"And he would do well to listen to you." Risumi firmly nodded. She glanced at Ayumu, "Think it's time?"

Ayumu smirked and set down his half-eaten cookie, "Yeah. It's time."

"What are you doing?" Hitoshi watched as his father rose and disappeared down the hall to his and Risumi's bedroom, returning moments later with a small folder tucked under his arm.

"I'll be entering my third trimester in January." Risumi absently rubbed her belly, "We've known the gender for quite some time now, and we've wanted to tell the both of you for a while."

"Sorry I've been so busy." Ren stated.

"Don't worry about it, sweetie." Risumi smiled warmly as Ayumu sat down and placed the folder in front of Ren and Hitoshi. "This folder here has ultrasounds and the gender. Recovery Girl has been looking after me pretty well."

Ren's mouth went dry at the folder, of the psuedo-sibling he'd never be able to meet.

Hitoshi nudged him, "You should open it."

"Me?" Ren blinked at him, "Why not you?"

"I have my whole life to get to know my baby brother or sister." Hitoshi kept his voice firm, but it did waver near the end, "It's only fair that you get the first look before... you know."

Ren pursed his lips, then looked down at the folder. Without further ado, he flipped it open before any hesitation could creep in. He squinted at the ultrasound photos clipped to the paperwork, his heart warming at the vague image of a tiny person beginning to form. His Personas crept forward in the mindscape to see, making various noises of approval or, in Amaterasu's case, nearly weeping with joy.

"This child shall be strong!!" Zaou-Gongen roared in utmost pride, "For the Strength, there's no other path!"

His eyes caught the red circle at the bottom of the page, "It's... it's a girl?"

"I..." Hitoshi's voice became thick as he looked at his parents with wide eyes, "I'm going to have a baby sister?"

"You are." Ayumu smirked, and Risumi leaned forward with an odd, yet warm, expression.

The way the both of them looked at Ren and Hitoshi, their eyes glittering as if waiting for something else to happen, made Ren frown. He looked back down at the paperwork as Hitoshi's eyes filled with stars. He scanned the ultrasound photo and saw it labeled in the corner as 'Baby A.'

"Wait a minute..." Ren moved the paperwork aside to see another underneath, clipped with yet another photo labeled as 'Baby B.' Ren looked up, jaw dropping, "You're having twins?"

Zaou-Gongen's excited howling gained volume until it drowned the whole mindscape.

Hitoshi puffed out his chest, his eyes heavily watering, "I'm going to have two baby sisters!?"

"Yep." Ayumu's grin was incredibly warm as he looked at Risumi, "Identical twins."

Risumi nodded, "Ayumu."

Ayumu chuckled as he dug in his pockets and set two enamel key chains in front of Ren and Hitoshi in the shape of lotus flowers. The five closest petals to the center were various shades of deep blues or violets, the colors all complimenting each other, while the outer layer of petals was a lighter blue, closer to the cerulean of the flames when Ren's costume or Personas were summoned. The petals and outer edge of the charm was bordered in gold.

"This is...?" Ren picked one up to study it.

"It's the new logo for our cafe." Risumi reached into her pocket and held her charm up, and Ayumu did the same, "The five petals at the center represent me, Hitoshi, Ayumu, and the twins. The outer petals represent you, Ren."

"Me?"

"Yeah, you." Ayumu smirked as he reached over and playfully poked Ren in the forehead, "The one who saved us from Silver Falcon and the Shie Hassaikai, the one who warmed our hearts and ultimately saved our business... our very lives." Ayumu traced over the cerulean petals with his index finger, "Our guardian and protector when nobody else even bothered to lend a hand. We're not lying when we say we count you as our son, too."

"Without you..." Risumi shook her head and rubbed her belly, "I doubt we would've survived."

Ren grasped the lotus charm tightly, his throat lodged with emotion.

"And not only that, we've decided- Oh!"

Ren, Hitoshi, and Ayumu were half out of their seats at Risumi's cry.

"What's wrong? Are you in any pain?" Ayumu hovered over her, hands out, "Do we need Recovery Girl? I'll run out and get her-"

“No, silly.” Risumi chuckled, “Come here, all of you. I can feel them moving!”

The three boys were fully out of their seats within the second, hands pressed against Risumi’s belly. A few seconds passed when Ren felt the tiniest of thumps against his palm. His Personas crept closer until they were all at the very edge of the mindscape, barely a toe away from manifesting in reality.

“I felt it!” He said, expression breaking out into a wide smile.

“Me too!” Hitoshi took a deep breath and beamed at his mother’s stomach, “Hey there, I’m your big brother, Hitoshi. I’m going to take great care of you two, you’ll see.” He gently nudged Ren’s shoulder with his own, “This is our oldest brother. He’s a real badass, you know. I’ll tell you all about him when you’re old enough.”

Ren chuckled, vision suddenly blurry.

“One of the children’s energy thrives, but...” Futsunushi’s presence darkened.

A stroke of worry flashed through Amaterasu and Cybele.

“What’s wrong?”

The barest trickle of Salvation’s energy flowed through Cybele, down Ren’s arm, and into Risumi, weak enough to generate not a single wisp of light.

Risumi’s eyes widened as she stared at Ren.

“Nothing to worry about now.” Cybele muttered.

Amaterasu sighed at Ren’s intense curiosity, “We sensed that one of the children bore a... defect in their developing spine. Hidden enough to where it wouldn’t have been detected until it was too late, but there is no worry to be had, now.”

“Thank you.” Zaou-Gongen’s thunderous voice faltered, “If something happened to them and we weren’t around...”

Attis studied Zaou-Gongen with cool eyes, “I never pegged you as a doting father figure, Zaou.”

Zaou-Gongen said nothing, but his fiery stance and intense, protective glare revealed all.

Ren gave Risumi a sheepish smile, one she returned with motherly warmth. She put her hand over Ren’s and squeezed, the lotus key chains still in their grasps clinking together. No words were needed, as Risumi seemed to understand .

Ren’s smile melted into a genuine one as he felt the next thump under his palm, stronger this time.

Yeah, this little family would be alright.

December 11 th - Afternoon

Ectoplasm gathered up books and papers from his desk, and gave Ren a glance when he didn’t move, “Are you coming along?”

“In a minute.” Ren leaned back in his chair and looked across the empty classroom, “I’ll catch up, so go ahead.”

Ectoplasm dipped his head in a nod and walked out, leaving Ren to stare down at his desk in contemplation. The Teacher’s Assistant desk, placed perpendicular to Ectoplasm’s desk, with enough space to stand and move to the writing board with ease. Windows behind him let in the cold sunlight, edges lined in snow and frost from the light blizzard he and Aizawa experienced a few nights ago.

In the silence, he heard the clock above the board ticking.

With each tick tick, a precious second counted down to the inevitable, and over the past few days the weight of it pressed down on everyone . He didn't mind it. Not in the slightest, from spending most lunch hours at the Shinsou dorm, reading stories to Eri at night, cooking and baking with Tobita and enjoying meals with this world's Phantom Thieves and the teachers. The rest of the time he was usually with students or tending to his duties as a TA.

The strain of having less and less time affected them all.

Heavier eyes and rough nights. Helping hands that held Ren's longer and longer. Hell, last night the teacher's dorm had a movie night. Eri and Morgana sat on his lap, with every one of his teammates pressing in from all sides. He didn't even question how Shuichi and Lady Stubbs laid over the top of the couch without getting tired and falling off halfway through the movie. Tobita and Manami leaned against either of his shoulders, with Atsuhiko shamelessly laying sideways over their feet, somehow looking refined and dignified as he propped his head up with a hand on his cheek. Kaito took one look at them all and smiled a small, wistful smile, as he etched the scene into his memory.

With a sigh, he collected his things and stood up lest any more cherished seconds slip through his fingers with ominous ticks .

He stopped before he could so much as walk around his desk, eyes widening as the classroom door opened and a student walked in, looking troubled.

Her dark hair was wrapped in a loose bun, with a subtle prism of colors reflecting from the light underneath, and her eyes were the brilliant shades of a summer sunset.

Those eyes latched onto him and widened, "Oh, Amamiya-sensei!" He didn't think he'd get used to that or Joker-sensei, "I... was looking for Ectoplasm-sensei."

"Do you need help with something, Fukui-san?"

She stilled, “You know my name?”

“Of course I do.” He said with a teasing smirk, “I’d be a sorry Teacher’s Assistant if I didn’t know any students’ names, especially with a second-year student who just left the classroom not ten minutes ago. Now, did you need something?”

She regained herself remarkably fast, holding the chemistry textbook and her notebook to her chest, “I was going to ask Ectoplasm-sensei for advice. I’m a bit lost over some of the formulas we went over earlier.”

Ren gave her a smile as he set his things down, “If you want, I can go over the material again and help you figure it out. I learned a certain trick on how to nail down the order of those formulas, if it’ll help?”

“You actually understand all of this? But you’re my age, right?”

“More or less,” Ren chuckled as he pulled on Kohryu’s wisdom, “But I find that my age hardly matters in this situation. If you’re not comfortable with me, then I can easily direct you to where Ectoplasm went so you can ask him. It’s up to whatever you decide, Fukui-san.”

She bit her lip and thought for a long moment, the tick tick of the clock pounding in Ren’s skull. With a sigh, she went over to her desk -second row, third away from the window- and sat down with a straightened spine and eyes forward.

“I trust you, Amamiya-sensei.” She opened her textbook and notebook, pen at the ready.

He had to keep his face straight when he realized it was a red pen, with the flaming hat and mask design stamped on the side.

Instead Ren grinned at her, then went around to the board and swept up a marker. By the end of the session, her pen rapidly flew across the paper without his aid, and within the next day, she and more students came to him for help after class.

He found that helping students silenced the overwhelming tick of the clock.

December 13th - Evening

“Isn’t that enough candy?” Atsuhiro asked from beside Ren, plates clinking together as they washed them from dinner, “You’re going to give Eri cavities!”

“I’m sure it won’t be that bad!” Shuichi grinned as he popped another piece in his mouth and chewed.

“As long as she brushes her teeth right after,” Hawks grinned and handed Eri another piece of caramel, wings gently fluttering, “I’m sure it’ll be fine. Besides! These caramels are homemade and they taste way better than regular ones in the store!”

“Don’t blame us if she gets a sugar rush,” Tobita said with a soft smile.

Manami nodded, “We’ll be sure to let Ryukyu know who’s responsible.”

“Ganging up on me!” Hawks put a hand over his chest and fell back over his chair, wings sagging to the floor, “Aren’t they just evil, Eri-chan!?”

Eri giggled and leaned in to whisper, “I’ll bribe them with candy later.”

Hawks snickered.

“Spirited as always, huh?” A familiar detective said.

Ren looked to the door as Tsukauchi, Yagi, and Nezu walk in.

“You guys have been gone all day.” Manami pointed out as she smiled, “But... congratulations for being promoted.”

“Thanks.” Tsukauchi smiled, “The new Commissioner’s office is a lot bigger than my last one.”

“Congratulations, Tsukauchi.” Ren said as he dried his hands, “If anyone deserves this, it’s you.”

Tsukauchi beamed. Nezu and Yagi exchanged knowing glances as the former detective reached into his coat pocket, approaching the counter where Ren stood opposite.

“I came by to give this to you.” Tsukauchi said as he placed close to Ren, who gaped when Tsukauchi removed his hand.

“Your detective badge?” Ren raised a brow as he ran his fingers over the smooth, worn metal, “Is that even legal ?”

“I don’t need it anymore, and as long as you aren’t going to wave it around and do anything heinous with it, it should be fine.”

Ren snorted, “You don’t have to worry about that.”

“I know. I trust you, and that’s why I’m giving it to you as... something to remember me by when you go home.” Tsukauchi sat down on the closest stool, glancing at Ren with indiscernible emotion.

Atsuhiro cleared his throat, “The rest of us will be in the living room.”

The others exchanged a strange look, and walked out with Hawks after he playfully swept Eri up in his arms.

Ren frowned when they were alone, “Tsukauchi...”

“You don’t need to say it.” Tsukauchi clasped his hands over the counter, “At the beginning, I unintentionally put you through hell. And then we went through hell with each other between Kamino and the Shie Hassaikai. And now, all of us are fighting together to get you and your friends home. I'd say it's been quite the journey." Tsukauchi smiled, and Ren detected the melancholy that drenched it, "And I wouldn't be in my position if it wasn't for you. You can count on me when the day comes for the final battle."

Tsukauchi stood up and put a hand over his hat.

"Leaving so soon?" Ren said with a smirk, "Are you sure you don't want any coffee or curry?"

"Well..." Tsukauchi turned and motioned for Ren to follow into the living room, "I only stopped by for a short time to drop off my badge for you. I had... a previous engagement already set."

"A 'previous engagement', he says." Yagi grinned at Tsukauchi, "And totally not a date?"

"A date !?" Atsuhiro whirled around to Tsukauchi, "Why didn't you say so!? We could've done something to help you get ready!!"

Tsukauchi sputtered, an uncharacteristically red shade spotting his cheeks, "I-It's not a date!"

"No," Nezu grinned wide, "It's only a dinner with a lovely woman at a nice, fancy restaurant no less, to get to know one another. Not a date in the slightest!"

"Who is this not-date with, anyway?" Ren asked innocently.

Tsukauchi cleared his throat and tried to regain his composure, "It's with Zoey."

"The doctor who helped out Recovery Girl with... me before?"

He nodded.

Ren patted him on the back, and horror crept into Tsukauchi's expression at Ren's smirk, "Have fun on your date. She seems like a wonderful person.”

“N-not you too!” Tsukauchi cried. “It’s just... we’re celebrating my promotion, and I’ve been meaning to ask her to get coffee anyway but neither of us had time until recently, a-and Recovery Girl mentioned this place-”

“Totally a date.” Ren deadpanned.

Tsukauchi hid his face in his hands.

“And you’re going in that ? In your boring old work attire?” Atushiro gasped, affronted, “No, no, no. A fine lady needs a fine gentleman to accompany her! Ren, if you would give me a hand, Tsukauchi needs to redo his attire!”

“Wh-what, you can’t-”

“Come on, Tsukauchi. Be honest, you want to impress her, right?” Ren stated.

Tsukauchi finally gave up with a long sigh, “Yeah, I guess.”

“Right! Now come along!” Atsuhiko grabbed Tsukauchi’s elbow, and both he and Ren dragged the man into Atsuhiko’s room for a change of clothes.

After Tsukauchi left, in a dashing suit and tie they chose for him, the worn detective badge found its home within Joker’s costume.

Next to his heart, stored carefully away with its treasured brethren.

December 15 th - Afternoon

Ground Beta’s buildings ricocheted with ferocious student cries and the song of magic dancing on an icy wind.

Joker perched on the corner of the building, watching the hero students in their winter costumes experiment with pieces of his soul. Sure, they could've done this in Cementoss' gym, shielded from the outside elements, but pitting 41 students with new magical accessories in close quarters could only spell disaster.

Several of his Personas, this world's Phantom Thieves, and the teachers were spread across the city in small student groups, showing them how to use these new magics.

Endeavor and Nigteye were somewhere around here too, going over the details of this 'upcoming mission' with Nezu.

Right now, Joker looked down as Todoroki had a blizzard ring on his right hand, and a blazing ring on his left.

He and Bakugo stood before Gang Orca, who wielded a new and terrifying weapon at his back. Yagi had asked for an additional weapon after dinner last night in addition to the gun he had at the USJ, and Gang Orca offered Mjolnir. In exchange, Joker gifted Gang Orca the wicked and demonic-looking bardiche born from Beezlebub. Gang Orca's size and the general design of the bardiche made for an absolutely terrifying figure.

"So," Todoroki frowned as he glanced between the rings, "It's just like using our Quirks, but slightly different?"

"Correct," Gang Orca nodded, "Just focus the way how you control your Quirk, but instead push that intent through the accessories Joker gifted you."

Todoroki's expression hardened as he turned to a pair of abandoned buildings, the familiar ice of a Diamond Dust coating one building, the blaze of Inferno consuming the other.

"About time you got it, IcyHot!" Bakugo snapped, "Now watch this!"

Joker sighed at the next building collapsing under a fiery Gigantomachia.

"The Shadows will fear these children who witnessed the Reaper's demise." Amaterasu whispered in approval as similar clouds of dust stained the horizon all across Ground Beta.

"But learning control is paramount." Satanael countered, "I'll discuss it with the other children, and Bakugo especially, before the day ends."

"Hey, at least this isn't a Charged Gigantomachia like what happened to that mountain during the Summer Camp." Sandalphon said.

Joker snorted as he sensed Satanael heading towards Bakugo's group, and went to check on the next a few blocks away. He spotted Endeavor and Nighteye then, standing in the middle of the street.

Nezu and Nighteye were speaking with Endeavor, the man's expression serious as he listened. Nighteye saw Joker's shadow, and looked up at him with a nod. Endeavor and Nezu followed suit. Joker waved at them before moving on.

"Again! WITH FEELING!!!" Miruko shouted at her group of Midoriya, Kirishima, Shishida, and Kendo.

Midoriya shouted a battle cry as the wind kicked up around him, using the strange and alien little statue from Hastur to create a devastating tornado.

Joker heard the flutter of familiar wings before Kirishima and the others could try theirs out, and looked over to see Hawks land beside him. Vibrant wings wrapped around Joker, as they had so many times these past few days that the action was second nature.

"Enjoying the show?" Hawks said with a playful smirk.

“They’re doing well.” Joker returned his gaze to Miruko, who had Midoriya trapped under her arm while shouting praise, ignoring how Midoriya’s face was beet red, “They hardly need me to step in personally.”

Hawks hummed, the wings draping over Joker tightening to provide an extra shield from the cold, “You taught us pretty well, you know. And I heard from the teachers that the students from other classes have really taken to you. Is it true you had to move your little after-school study group to the library?”

Joker felt his face heat up, “Yeah, there are too many students for one classroom now. But...” Joker grimaced and shook his head, “Our time here is almost up. It might be a good time to bring it up to Nezu for Kaito to start taking over. It would give Kaito a head start on becoming a teacher himself.”

“Yeah...” Hawks barely managed to hide the pain flashing across his expression, his hand reaching up to ruffle Joker’s hair.

They stayed silent for a few moments, just idly watching the students practice. A stray thought distracted Joker, and he couldn’t help but mention it to Hawks now that they were alone.

“Hey, about Ryoto...”

Hawks tilted his head, “What about him?”

Joker pursed his lips. What was he supposed to say? ‘By the way, the guy who raised you might just happen to be the reigning god of this world?’

Hawks waited a few seconds more before he sighed, “Funny you mention Ryoto, actually.”

“Why?”

"I haven't been able to get in touch with him for a while." Hawks dug out his phone and scrolled through dozens of messages, "Either he's just that busy now that Kunikazu's case has been blown sky high, or he's ignoring me. It's not like him, though."

"A god disappearing from his realm?" Amaterasu hummed, "It may be a troubling sign..."

"He could simply be off on some business, like Hawks implied." Attis supplemented, "There's no need for us to jump to anything heinous."

"Hey, don't worry about it. I'm sure he'll turn up soon." Hawks stated, then he grinned brightly at Joker, "After this class is over, meet me and the others at the entrance to Ground Beta."

Joker blinked at the change in subject, "Why?"

Hawks' expression bloomed into a genuine smirk, "Just meet us there. It's important!"

Joker snorted, "If you say so. By the way, shouldn't you be teaching your own group right now?"

"Oops." The warmth of Hawks' wing disappeared as the man stepped away, "I'll check on them, but Tokoyami and his teammates made great progress already!"

With that, he flew off with a hard beat of his wings, sparks from the fiery blade at his back leaving a burning trail through the air.

Joker passed the time by watching the remaining groups from above, thoughts of Ryoto falling to the back of his mind. The teachers called this session to a stop after another hour, and while Power Loader checked in the Persona Gear from the students, Joker made his way to where Hawks and the others agreed to wait.

Miruko flashed him a grin and wrapped her arm around his shoulders. Nobody commented on the hidden sadness veiled in her smile, as it was in all of their stances, “Joker, we got something for you!”

“You did?”

“Yeah...” Ryukyu bore a softer smile, “We all came together to make it.”

“As a thank you for... well...” Gang Orca fondly ruffled Joker’s hair, but kept his hand there for several seconds, “For everything.”

“And so you don’t forget us.” Best Jeanist said smoothly.

“As if he’d every forget us anyway!” Miruko cried.

Hawks smirked as he glanced at Tensei, who chuckled and held his hand out to Joker.

Joker’s eyes widened at the bracelet sitting in Tensei’s palm, an elegant braid of familiar dark blue and startling white. Small metal rings around the bracelet attached a few familiar items protected in some sort of resin: A pink dragon scale, an orca’s tooth, and a tiny scarlet feather smaller than his pinky.

Tensei placed it in Joker’s palm, and he turned the bracelet around several times, studying it intently while speechless.

Tensei cleared his throat, “With Power Loader’s help, we used pieces of my engines to make the metal rings, and to reinforce the center of the bracelet so it’s as strong and sturdy as possible.”

“I wove the braid together with pieces of my costume,” Best Jeanist glanced at Miruko, “And with a few donations of Miruko’s hair.”

Miruko snickered as her free hand rubbed at the startlingly short fur around her rabbit ears, “Happy to give it up for this!”

“I shed scales all the time too, in my dragon form.” Ryukyu said.

“And I’ll just regrow that feather easily!” Hawks chirped.

Gang Orca chuckled, “Orca whales don’t regrow their teeth, but I was more than happy to make this small sacrifice if it means we could all make something to remember us by, Joker.”

“I...” Joker wrapped his fingers around the bracelet and held it to his chest, “I don’t know what to say. Thank you.”

“You’re welcome!” Miruko cackled, but she still held onto Joker with an iron grip.

“Now, there’s just one more thing.” Ryukyu stated.

“You guys don’t have to-”

“Save it, Joker.” Hawks said with a smirk, “Let us do this for you, while we still have the chance.”

“... Okay?”

Best Jeanist checked his watch, “We made dinner reservations for one of the high end restaurants in Musutafu, and we have plenty of time to get ready yet.”

“We asked Nezu in advance,” Gang Orca said, “So it’s alright.”

“And of course Mona can come too!” Tensei beamed, “It’ll be a nice, private dinner with just our group.”

Joker realized, as he gripped the bracelet tighter, that this would be their version of a going away party. The final chance to be together before things got too busy and time ran out, and he couldn’t possibly say no when they gave him such fragile looks as they awaited his answer.

“A dinner sounds nice.” Joker said as he shoved that ever familiar ball of emotion down his throat, “I’m sure Mona will love it, too.”

“That’s the spirit!” Miruko wrapped her other arm around him and hugged him tight, and he politely pretended not to see the budding tears in her eyes as she buried her face in his hair.

She collected herself and finally let go, just long enough for the rest of the hero group to hide the sorrow soaking into them.

December 17 th - Morning

Nezu watched Ren work on the last problem with a smile of pride on his face.

The boy finished what Nezu had written out on the board, the strokes of his pen going silent as Ren looked up in expectation.

“Nezu?” Ren frowned as Nezu continued to stare at him, “Are you okay?”

“Ah, of course!” Nezu reached for his teacup and found it empty, and Ren gave him a strange look when he reached for the teapot to refill it.

“That’s your fifth cup of tea, you know.” Ren glanced at the heavy tick tick of the clock, “I know you never drink this much right before lunch. What’s wrong?”

“This is our last agreed-upon day for your lessons with me.” Nezu chuckled as he set the pot aside, “So I’ve been thinking. Reminiscing, really. Many others have been giving you presents, correct? A means to remember them by.”

“Yes.” Ren reached up to his chest, in the spot where Nezu knew he kept such items on his costume, “What about them?”

“Seeing how there are barely a handful of days left...” Nezu put his cup aside and opened one of his desk drawers.

Ren stared at the intricate fountain pen Nezu held up. It was a beautiful piece of art, one he paid top dollar for its creation. The smooth blue handle was flawless and the gold etching around it was a masterful work of intricate fluid lines. The nib could hold more ink than any other pen he'd had, and it could write like a dream .

Nezu leaned forward and placed it on the edge of his desk, motioning for Ren to take it.

"You're giving me a pen?" Ren asked as he stood from his desk and approached. He picked up the pen and studied it, "It looks expensive."

Nezu grinned, "It's not just any pen, but one carries quite a story."

Ren looked at Nezu with an indiscernible expression, "How so?"

"It's the very pen I used to sign the documents to become principal of U.A." Nezu swiveled around in his chair and looked up to the various frames on the wall, "That very same one I always kept on hand for such important documents and meaningful occasions over the years. The same writing utensil I used to start my Vigilante Program! Why, that pen you're holding in your hands is a very piece of U.A.'s history itself!"

"Are you sure you want to give it to me?" Ren asked, eyes wide, "If it's that important-"

Nezu held up a paw, "Of course. I would not give this to you if I wasn't absolutely certain." His tone softened, "It is a token of how important you are to me, Ren. How important you are to all of U.A. itself. Take this pen not only as a personal gift from me, but also as a sign of your own accomplishments as well!"

Ren's eyes turned sharp and contemplating, but he nodded, "I'll put it to good use."

“See that you do! It is a remarkable partner to have in the world the paperwork!”

The lunch bell rung, signaling an end to their morning routine for the last time.

“Nezu-”

“It’s quite alright.” Nezu grinned, but he knew Ren was smart enough to see past his forced cheer, “Do get some good lunch. Cementoss has a riveting lesson for his class today and you’ll need the energy!”

Ren smiled sadly. Then, he bowed at a full 90 degree angle, “Thank you for everything, Nezu. I... we wouldn't have made it this far without your help.” He stood fully and collected all of the notebooks he’d used for their classes. “And here.”

“Oh?”

Ren huffed, warmth spreading on his face, “Something to remember me by. All of my notes and assignments are in these.”

Nezu took them with both paws and watched as Ren packed up his remaining things and headed towards the door. A small handful of heartbeats went by before Nezu opened the cover of the first notebook. He read a whole two lines before vision turned blurry.

“You won’t tell anyone, will you Admiral Feesh?” Nezu’s chuckles came out wet and shaky as he reached for the tissues.

After all, nobody needed to know that the Devil of U.A. could actually cry.

December 19 th - Night

“What are we doing here?” Joker raised a brow as he looked across the Challenge room. Lavenza was at his side, having led him here, while the rest of the Attendants stood in a line before him, expressions firm. This world’s Phantom Thieves and Hitoshi were seated around the entrance. “Normally I wouldn’t mind some training, but-”

“This isn’t training.” Lavenza stepped away, and Joker felt his stomach fall to the floor as she went by her siblings’ side, her golden eyes blazing. “This will be your test. The final test to see if you truly have what it takes to defeat Yaldabaoth.”

“You’ll fight all of us at once.” Elizabeth smirked and cracked her knuckles, “We’ve been putting you through the wringer these past two months, now you have to show that all of our effort was worth it.”

“We won’t be holding back.” Theodore pulled on gloves, “So you shouldn’t either, especially since the Reaper bestowed a great boon of strength upon you.”

“Show the full power you’ve gained from defeating the Reaper, and from your entire journey beforehand.” Margaret’s body glowed an ominous blue as she floated a few inches from the floor, her Compendium opening with a gust of wind, “Prepare yourselves.”

“My, my, and don’t forget about us.” Mr. Compress and the others came up to him, “Joker’s not the only one you’ve been training.”

“We’re gonna kick your ass as a team!” Spinner cried.

“Merp!”

“I do look forward to winning.” Gentle Criminal said.

“Yeah, don’t cry when you lose!” La Brava chuckled by his side.

“We got this Joker.” Mona looked up to him with a smirk, “Let’s prove to them once and for all we have what it takes!”

Joker returned Mona's smirk before looking back at Hitoshi with a raised brow, "And what are you doing here?"

"Wow, I'm hurt." Hitoshi deadpanned. He looked down at the plush blanket he sat on and then the multitude of picnic baskets around him, "I'm here to watch, and more importantly, to make sure your fight doesn't completely destroy our surprise celebration dinner."

"A surprise...?" Joker's eyes widened.

"Well, not such a surprise anymore." Mr. Compress chuckled as he tipped his hat, "But! We'll have to earn it by winning against these four. Easy as cake, right?"

"Right." Joker grinned as a surge of blue fire swelled behind them, a light tingle spread across Joker's face as his mask disappeared and the deep shadows of every Persona in the mindscape draped their shoulders. "Let's do this!"

Lavenza jumped first, the roar of her chainsaw approaching so fast that Joker's teeth chattered.

Everyone scattered .

Joker laughed as he ducked under Lavenza's deadly swipe. She spun on her next step and used her weight to continue a seamless tango of deadly strikes. Amaterasu, Satanael, Zaou-Gongen, and Beelzebub darted in with sweeps of magic while Zaou-Gongen used Tetrakarn. The red flash consumed all of their bodies in time to deflect Lavenza's chainsaw.

Mr. Compress met Theodore with Futsunushi, Lakshmi, Beelzebub, and Attis.

Gentle Criminal and La Brava faced Margaret with the aid of Sandalphon, Loa, Hastur, and Mother Harlot.

And finally, Spinner, Lady Stubbs, and Mona faced Elizabeth's bloodthirsty attacks with Mercurius, Messiah Picaro, Cybele, Odin, and Fafnir.

Kohryu swirled in a storm of golden glittering scales above, the dragon shifting between all of the battles at once. He disrupted Elizabeth's next attack with a claw swipe, used his tail to beat Theodore back from hitting Mr. Compress, stopped Margaret from summoning a Persona with a well placed Psy counter.

Joker and his group of Personas jumped back when Kohryu dove for them, Lavenza leaping away from the wall of gold scales as Kohryu pulled his snapping jaws away, the tornadic winds he generated devouring the sound of the chainsaw. The flutter of her dress and the way her hair moved with her was almost mesmerizing, as was the smile on her face when the coast cleared and she charged back at Joker.

But the battles couldn't stay separate forever, not within this closed space.

Elizabeth cackled when she and Theodore switched places with such speed that it left both parties off kilter. The bare second it took to adapt to the change cost Mr. Compress a burn on his arm, and for Spinner to be hit square on in the back with a Concentrated Megido.

Margaret and Lavenza came together and attacked in unison, a mighty spearhead against Joker's group, but a thread of thought was all it took for Odin and the others to weave together their defences, for Gentle Criminal to snap his fingers for his Quirk.

"Now, Joker! Jump!!" Gentle Criminal cried when the wall of Personas stopped the pair of Attendants.

Joker trusted him, and did just that. The stretchy ground undulated under his feet, and he was launched through the air. He bounced around the Challenge Room in jagged lines and, having known where Gentle had been placing his barriers from Kohryu's watchful gaze, grinned as he dove for their exposed backs.

He combined the power of eight Personas, the intensity writhing under their skin and seeping down into their very soul, as he landed like a crack of thunder, blade and interweaving magics singing through the air. The floor cratered, the walls shook and trembled, chains rattled with the intensity of Fire and Ice swirling together, of Bless and Curse working in harmony as equal balancing forces of nature, of the void ripping open to summon Almighty eyes and an inky serpent to lash out at their targets.

Lavenza's startled cry and Margaret's grunt of pain was music in their ears.

The Attendants were tossed through the air, but they caught themselves and landed on their feet, with Lavenza skidding back several meters behind Margaret.

"Good. Good!" Lavenza was panting, the hands grasping her chainsaw shaking. A bruise marred her face, but her grin was split from ear to ear, "This is the true power of the Trickster!"

"But we're not finished yet!" Margaret, despite her words, gave them looks of approval.

Joker matched Lavenza's grin, and the fights continued. His teammates fought back with everything they had. They rose to their feet whenever they were knocked down, pushed their attacks in tune to Joker's. Bodies bruised but not broken, they rushed head first to match Joker in full support, the weight of their hearts and souls backed every step of the way.

In truth, the longer the battle went on, the more he and his Personas melded as one being. He could no longer tell where he began, and where they ended.

He was Joker ducking under Elizabeth's hurling fireball to swing his dagger in a counter-

He was Lakshmi skirting around the edges of these battles, her long scarf flowing like water, to throw debuffs at the Attendants-

-They were Attis and Cybele combining their magic to form a tornado of fire-

-They were Loa drinking away Margaret's health and magic pools, the taste of expensive wine drifting over their tongue-

- They were Futsunushi and Zaou-Gongen sending blades and fists to protect their teammates-

-Their throat hurt from laughing so much, but the piece of them in the shape of Fafnir's body was having too much fun to care-

-Ice crackling with electricity cascaded from their multi-headed-beast and the mighty swing of their faithful spear-

-The golden wings on their cross spread, and Almighty magic flowed between their thrashing tentacles and their sword shaped gun, pitch-black wings shielding their eyes from the light-

-They were the bountiful sunlight that glinted off their own golden scales-

-From wings that buzzed with flies' decay and wings that shone with heaven's power came the might of their darkness and light-

"Joker!" Mona's voice called to them, "On our signal, finish it with an All-Out-Attack with your Personas!"

"Got it!" Seventeen voices reigned down over the Challenge Room in unison, their bodies glowing with Concentrate.

Surprise flared across their teammates' expressions, and the Attendants hesitated in sheer awe, but this world's Phantom Thieves covered it by moving together.

La Brava's Quirk empowered Gentle Criminal's barriers to enclose a space around the Attendants. Mr. Compress and Spinner used the abilities from their Persona accessories to push the Attendants closer from either directions. Mona and Mercurius moved in tandem to slice off any escape with blasts of emerald wind.

Mona spoke when the injured Attendants were all back to back.

"Now!!"

Joker stood before them, his eyes shining with the countless shades of his soul. Kohryu floated overhead as he reared his head back, his throat glowing with a Celestial Ray. But it was more than that.

Each piece of themselves poured their power into it. The blinding white within Kohryu's maw gained undulating ribbons of every color- red, sky blue, yellow, green, purple, indigo, gold, and black- which built and built until each color spread out to touch, not a single color overwhelmed the others. When the pressure was at its apex, magic snapping and coursing through every fibre of the Velvet Room, Kohryu released it.

A great beam of multicolored light shot from his jaws and descended upon the Attendants within an instant. The entire Velvet Room shook as if struck with an atomic bomb, a massive mushroom cloud consuming Kohryu and the others as torrents of wind burst around them. Dust and broken pieces of chain and stone were thrown in all directions.

"Wh-what is this power!?" Mona screeched as Mercurius scooped him up and darted behind the stretchy air barrier Gentle Criminal used to protect them from the fallout.

Thankfully, Hitoshi and their surprise dinner were shielded behind it, too.

Hitoshi was bone white by the time the winds started dying down, the dust settled and the chains slowly stopped in their swing. Silence overtook the Velvet Room, only broken as a single chain snapped and crumpled to the floor. Cracks and breaks stained every surface except for a clear area behind Gentle Criminal.

At the head of it all, Joker stood unmarred beside his other selves, staring down into the massive crater as the Attendants groaned.

“Holy shit...” Elizabeth was the first to crawl out, her pristine blue clothes all but covered in dust, burns, and tears.

“I would say watch your language...” Margaret sighed in exhaustion as she primly sat on the edge of the crater, hair dishevelled in unruly waves of blonde, “But in this instance, I agree with you.”

Theodore wobbled on his feet, trying in vain to fix his hat, “I believe the win goes to Joker.”

Elizabeth snorted as she flopped over, limbs spread-eagled, “You think?”

“Such power...” Lavenza abandoned her chainsaw in the crater, expression of boundless happiness shining through all the cuts and dirt upon her body, “I was right to believe in you. Even from the very moment Yaldabaoth cast you away from your world, my faith in you never wavered.”

“Lavenza...”

There was a snap of a finger behind them, and they turned to see Gentle Criminal dispelling his Quirk, “I say, what a marvelous show!”

“THAT WAS TOTALLY BADASS!” Spinner screamed as he threw up his hands.

“Merp!!”

Mr. Compress straightened his hat and coat, "This false-god is surely going to regret the day he was born." He waved a hand at the all but destroyed Challenge Room, "If a single attack did this, then I can't wait to see what it could do to an army of those nasty Shadows."

"I actually feel sorry for Yaldabaoth." La Brava said with a smirk, "But then again, not really. He deserves every ounce of pain that's coming."

Joker chuckled as his other selves traded looks of victory.

"Every time I turn around, you seem to gain more power." Hitoshi peered into Joker's vibrant prismatic eyes, "Damn. That Reaper guy really powered you up even more? Unfair."

Joker gave a sheepish grin and scratched the back of his head.

Hitoshi smiled and shook his head, "Now come on. The rest of us worked hard to make all this food, and after a battle like that, I'm sure everyone's hungry."

Elizabeth sat up as if she were electrocuted, "Food? Do you have more of those jam cookies in there!?"

Margaret frowned, "Elizabeth, we have to repair the Challenge Room before-"

"Yeah. Those cookies and more." Hitoshi stated.

Her siblings were left to choke on more dust as Elizabeth scrabbled towards the picnic blanket like a demon possessed.

Theodore's face fell in his hands as Hitoshi lurched back, hand whipping into one of the baskets to throw a package of home-made jam cookies at her.

"You can repair it later. Come and eat with us." Joker said as finally, each of his other selves disappeared one by one, "Although, we could use some healing first-"

Joker paused when the light of a Salvation flowed through the Challenge Room. He blinked and looked at Mona, who hadn't yet said anything. Mona didn't need to as he dispelled Mercurius, the unrivalled glee and elation in his eyes was so vivid that it struck Joker like it had real, physical weight.

Joker grinned as the two of them shed their costumes in unison, and Morgana jumped up to Ren's shoulder with motorboat purrs while rubbing his face against Ren's chin.

"So, what all did you guys make?" Ren asked as he sat down beside Hitoshi to shield him from Elizabeth, "There are a lot of baskets here."

"After you fell asleep, we snuck over to the Shinsou dorm and spent all night making these!" Mr. Compress sat across from Ren, carefully taking off his Arsene mask, top hat, and balaclava to set them aside. He shook his head and ran a gloved hand through his hair, "Of course, with Hitoshi's parents' help, it wasn't too difficult."

"Yeah, my dad was thrilled to make so much food again." Hitoshi said with a smirk, "He didn't want to get rusty."

"We wanted to do this for you and Morgana!" La Brava beamed, her eyes warm and shining, "It's the least we could do, really."

"I'm sure you've heard this several times in the past few weeks, but ours is just as genuine as a thank you for everything you've done for us..." Gentle Criminal smiled as he sat beside her, his expression wistful and a touch sad, "As well as serving as a private farewell party. I hate to think that we'll say goodbye in a number of days, but..."

Spinner paused, mouth wide open and seconds from shoving a stuffed meat bun down his gullet, "No! No sad stuff!! It'll be the best going away party ever!! Right Stubbs!?"

Lady Stubbs loudly gulped down a small plate's worth of fried fish, "Merp!!"

"Everyone." Morgana's eyes sparkled as the others laid out the rest of the food from the baskets, a veritable banquet of plates and pitchers, "Thank you."

They devoured the food with gusto.

Ren chose a plate of gyoza filled with pork and spices first, the flavors of Ayumu's skillful cooking dancing across his tongue.

"Although," Mr. Compress poured himself a cup of tea, "One question has always dogged my mind when we found out that Ren and Morgana weren't... of this world."

"What do you mean?" La Brava asked after she sipped some miso soup.

Mr. Compress leaned forward and looked around his comrades with a glint in his eyes, "I can't help but wonder how things would unfold for us, all of us, if Yaldabaoth never pulled his underhanded trick."

Gentle Criminal and La Brava exchanged glances before the former spoke, "Without Arsene's harsh words, I would've kept on the same path of being selfish... of doing what I did just for the sake of my fame, instead of lending a helping hand to the people who need it."

"I'll admit," La Brava sighed, "without Joker and Mona's help, the channel would probably not be as popular as it is now. Our fan base totally skyrocketed after the Cultural Festival!"

Spinner hummed and looked down at his dark leather jacket, to his yellow gloves and the golden scarf Mr. Compress gifted to him, "Without two masks to choose from, I would've followed Stain's ideology without question. I thought, even back during the Summer Camp, that I would've joined the League Of Villains and gone down a darker path.” Spinner frowned at Lady Stubbs, “I probably wouldn’t have met Stubbs, either! And that would be a total crime!”

“Merp!”

“I would be on the same boat as Spinner, staying with the League, that is.” Mr. Compress leaned back and looked up to the dark ceiling, “Without Joker and Mona’s accomplishments... let’s see... All For One would still be alive. The League would still be active. Toga, Twice, and Mustard wouldn’t have gotten the help they truly need, Dabi and Shigaraki would be walking free. Kurogiri would never have regained himself as Shirakumo. This is mostly based on what would’ve happened in the past, and we can only imagine all of the horrors the future would hold with all of these factors still in play.”

“Not to mention the absolute shit show of having nobody around to stop Silver Falcon.” Hitoshi said, brows furrowed as he looked between Ren and Morgana, “There’s no need to repeat what my parents already thanked you for, but aside from Silver Falcon, the hero system itself has improved by leaps and bounds. I... I don’t think I’d be as trained as I am without you two.”

Morgana’s fur puffed up, “I’m sure you would’ve made it!”

“You already had the potential to be a great hero, Hitoshi.” Ren said with a smile, “We just... helped you along.”

Hitoshi snorted, “‘Helped me along’ as if there’s no difference between being the twig of a trainee I’d be otherwise and being fully prepared to join the hero class. Give yourselves some credit.”

Morgana gave Ren an amused look, “I guess we can’t argue with that, can we?”

“I suppose it would be that way for all of us.” Gentle Criminal smiled at the Attendants who sat at the edges of the blanket, devouring any and all food placed in front of them, “We’re much better prepared to go out in the world thanks to their rigorous training regime.”

Spinner cackled, "I imagine we could go up against anybody after all of this is over! Evil doers beware!!"

"Speaking of," Ren placed his empty plate down and reached for some glazed dango, "How is that program of yours going? You guys will be ready to leave, right?"

"Yup!" La Brava beamed as she reached for her faithful laptop still stashed away here, "Actually, we'll be more than prepared, thanks to Oracle."

"Oh?" Morgana leaned forward.

La Brava smirked as she turned her laptop around to reveal familiar hieroglyphics phasing in and out of the code, "She slipped me a little something when she was here. As if this virus wasn't effective before, now it'll completely demolish any defences and let us slip away undetected."

Ren hummed, "That's a dangerous tool to have."

Morgana flicked his tail as he understood Ren's firm tone, "We're trusting you with this, alright? Oracle does, too."

"I understand, and I'll use it carefully." La Brava sat up straighter, expression sharp, "You don't need to worry! Oracle's program almost seems... sentient, in a way. It refuses to be used for anything evil, or as a way to purposely hurt people. And it won't let just anyone use it, either."

"Good." Ren relaxed with a smile.

"I still can't believe you guys are leaving." Hitoshi sighed as he set his plate and chopsticks down, "You better keep me updated, okay?"

La Brava raised her chin, smiling wide, "We will! I taught you enough about hacking and coded messages to where you won't be left in the dark."

Hitoshi smirked and firmly nodded.

They finished the food and Gentle Criminal began to clean up. Elizabeth and the other Attendants were sprawled out nearby, still exhausted, yet with their stomachs full to bursting with delicious food.

Gentle Criminal hesitated as he stored away the last plate, “Ren, Morgana, there is one more thing we have for you.”

“Two, actually.” Hitoshi added.

Gentle Criminal looked to Mr. Compress as he reached into his coat pockets, while Hitoshi turned to one of the baskets behind him.

Mr. Compress placed a blue orb in front of Ren and snapped his fingers, revealing a small pile of books. Not just any books, but photo albums.

“You finished them?” Morgana asked as Ren picked one up and opened it.

“We did!” Mr. Compress passed the others around so everyone had one, even Hitoshi, “We’ve made additional copies for Eri and Kaito as well. All of the photos we’ve ever taken, and a few extras from Eri, are in there.”

“A present, from all of us, to you.” La Brava whispered as she clutched hers.

Ren’s eyes widened as he looked at the first page to see all of this world’s Phantom Thieves, plus Kaito, Eri, and Hitoshi posing for a group photo. He ran his finger down the edge, his chest flooding with summery warmth. He turned the page and looked over the next few photos; Each a picture of the individual Phantom Thieves(honorary or not), doing random things.

Gentle Criminal savoring a cup of tea in his hands.

Mr. Compress in the middle of a magic trick in the teacher's dorm.

Spinner splayed out on a couch, fast asleep with Lady Stubbs tucked in his arm.

La Brava painting with Eri, their faces dotted with color.

Hitoshi could be seen in the corner of the last one, the smallest of smiles on his face as he watched Eri.

Kaito reading a book, clutching his chin in thought as he did so.

"We'll treasure this." Morgana whispered as he held back tears.

Ren closed the book and hugged it to his chest, "It's a promise."

Spinner and the others beamed at him.

Hitoshi cleared his throat, eyes red as if he was holding back his own tears, "And... here." He held out the black and gold fox mask, "I have no words to express how much you and Morgana did for me, how much I really valued your friendship. You're my best friend and a brother to me, Ren, and without you... I don't even know where I'd be."

Ren grasped the mask in both hands, "I'm glad you found a way to put a fox theme into your hero costume."

Hitoshi chuckled, "Thanks to Mei. We modeled the Persona Chords after a fox in tribute to this mask." His face hardened, "And this time, I'll be there to stand beside you at the final battle."

"We all will!" Mr. Compress handed out saucers of sparkling juice instead of sake, and held his up in a toast, "Let's spend these last days together getting pumped up for our finale, shall we? Cheers!"

"Cheers!" Everyone's voices joined in along with Lady Stubbs' iconic 'Merp!'.

Ren placed the fox mask on top of the photo album, his mindscape singing with the full power of these Arcanas.

Ren and Morgana drank the sparkling juice, and after, Morgana gave him a knowing look.

“We actually have something for you.” Ren stated as he dug around in his pockets for an envelope, “You can think of it as your first mission, once you leave U.A.”

“Oh?” Mr. Compress took it, tilting his head, “What is it?”

“Promise us you won’t open it until... until after we leave.” Morgana whispered, “It’s important.”

This world’s Phantom Thieves exchanged glances.

“Leaving me out, huh?” Hitoshi said with a smirk.

“It’ll be pretty public.” Morgana stated, “Just keep an eye on the news.”

“Fine.” Hitoshi sighed and looked at Mr. Compress, “Whatever it is, make it newsworthy.”

“I’m sure we’ll have no trouble with that.” Gentle Criminal lifted his cup and took another sip, and the small, private party began to wind down.

Within the hour, the precious treasures from the Moon, Apostle, Lovers, Temperance, and Faith joined the others in his costume.

December 24 th - Afternoon

Ren took a deep breath as they stood before the door to the 1-A dorms.

“What’s wrong, Ren-nii?” Eri asked, tugging on his hand.

“Nothing.” He smiled down at her, “This is just...”

“They invited us here, for our last day.” Morgana stated from Ren’s shoulder, “One big party, right?”

“Right.”

Ren reached for the door, but it flew open before he got closer.

Kirishima’s face lit up when he saw them, “Aniki! Morgana! Eri-chan!!” He held the door wider, “Get in here before you freeze your butts off!”

Eri giggled as she walked inside, leading Ren by his hand.

The 1-A dorm was full of hustle and bustle. Students from both 1-A and 1-B meandered around, setting up a tree, hanging lights, making ornaments. Hitoshi was here too, helping Tsuyu hang up tinsel around the kitchen door frame.

“H-Happy Halloween!!” Eri shouted once they were in the common room.

“Wrong holiday, Eri-chan.” Morgana whispered.

“Oh! Um... Merry Christmas?”

Many bright faces turned to them, and several rounds of ‘Merry Christmas!’ went around.

“Are you sure I’m not getting in the way?” Ren ask Kirishima with a raised eyebrow, “If this is between classes-”

“Don’t worry about it, dude!” Kirishima lightly nudged him on the shoulder.

“Agreed!!” Iida marched up to them, chest puffed out and shoulders straight, “We wanted to do this with everyone! And... to make it extra special because we all know...”

“That it’s your last day here.” Yaoyorozu smiled, “And how else would this last day go, if not as one big Christmas Party?”

Ren looked to Midoriya, who eagerly nodded.

“Alright.” He matched Midoriya’s smile, “Then what can I help with?”

“Leeet’s see...” Kirishima’s eyes sparkled as he threw an arm around Ren’s shoulders, careful not to dislodge Morgana, as his other hand pointed around the room, “There’s lights, the tree, arranging the presents, making cookies-”

“Ren-nii!” Eri looked at up at him, “Can we... can we decorate the tree?”

“Sure thing. Go ahead, Eri. I’ll be there in a minute.”

“I’ll go with!” Morgana declared as he jumped down and rushed towards the tree with Eri.

Bakugo was one of the students arranging the ornaments, but he hesitated when Eri gently pulled on his sleeve. He knelt down to her height as she whispered something to him, and the action drew others’ eyes as he smirked. Bakugo handed her to small box of ornaments, and Ren couldn’t help but smile when Bakugo lifted her up on his shoulders so she could hang her first ornament closer to the top of the tree.

“Oh my GOSH, BAKUGO!!” Mina clutched her chest and collapsed over the couch where Sero and Kaminari were sitting, “That’s too adorable!”

“Who knew all we needed to tame our resident explosives expert was an adorable little girl?” Kaminari said.

Sero slipped out his phone and aimed it towards them.

“Shut up!” Bakugo called back, “Tape-Face, don’t you dare take a picture or I’ll kick your a-”

Ren cleared his throat.

Bakugo cut himself off and looked up as Eri, who blinked innocently at him, “I’ll kick your butt into next week!”

“Sure, dude.” Sero smirked, and everyone heard the sound of his phone’s click. “Whatever you say...”

Bakugo went dangerously still.

Eri sighed as she dug around in the box until she pulled out a small red santa hat, almost matching the one on her own head. She stuck it on Bakugo’s head and then hugged him as best she could, “Don’t l-listen to them, Bakugo-nii! Can we continue decorating the tree? Pretty please?”

Bakugo’s face slowly turned red, but not in rage or embarrassment, rather it looked as if he was trying not to die from cuteness overload.

“You’re right, Eri-chan.” Bakugo stood taller, prouder despite his new santa hat, and turned back to face the tree, “We’ll make this thing look so darn pretty that it’ll be the best Christmas Tree that was ever put together! Right, Eri-chan?”

“Th-that’s right!!”

The unlikely pair put on the next few ornaments with determined fervor, while Morgana sat at the base of the tree, watching.

“Hey,” Iida’s lowered voice grabbed Ren’s attention.

Midoriya, Yaoyorozu, Kirishima, Iida, and Todoroki had gathered around him, giving him strange looks.

“Can we talk... in the kitchen?” Todoroki asked.

Ren smiled sadly, “Sure thing.”

While everyone else was still laughing and taking pictures of Bakugo and Eri, their little group snuck into the kitchen. Naturally, except for Hitoshi, who raised a brow and tilted his head in question. Ren simply gave him a reassuring smile and a gentle shake of his head.

Hitoshi shrugged and turned to watch Eri.

This kitchen didn't look any different to the one in the teacher's dorm.

"Here." Midoriya pulled out a familiar notebook from... somewhere . Where was he hiding that? Ren wasn't sure he wanted to know as he blinked at it.

"What's this?" Ren asked as he gently took it.

"It's for you!" Midoriya beamed at him, "The one where I originally wrote all the notes and theories I had about you... before we knew you were Joker. Plus some extra stuff after that!"

"I made sure to get every signature from both Class A and B!" Iida chopped his hand as Ren flipped open the notebook to read through it. "It's a present to you from both classes, as a thank you for... for everything you've ever done for us."

Ren looked up, eyes wide, "You guys..."

"Take it so that one day, I-if you miss us, you can just see our signatures and everything right there!" Kirishima's eyes watered, but he refused to let any tears fall, "Thank you, Ren, for being one of the manliest people I've ever had the pleasure of knowing!!"

"For..." Yaoyorozu cleared her throat, "For pulling the wool away from my eyes, and allowing me the chance to make amends for what my family did in the past."

"For healing my brother and helping me grow as a person!" Iida announced, his expression firm but shaky with paper-thin restraint.

Todoroki bowed to Ren, “You did a lot not just for me, but for my entire family. Thank you.” He stood fully, his dual colored eyes brimming with resolve, “And when the final battle begins, we’ll all be at your side to end this once and for all.”

“That’s right!” Kirishima cried.

“You’ve trained us well over these past weeks!” Iida said with a nod, “We’ll be ready.”

“And we won’t falter like we did with the Reaper.” Yaoyorozu’s expression hardened, “We won’t fail you, no matter what.”

Ren was struck speechless. Instead, he read through parts of the notebook. He skimmed through Midoriya’s notes, as he had already read those when they had that talk right before the Cultural Festival, and went to the pages lined with 40 signatures and messages.

From Midoriya’s ‘Thanks for being someone I could always look up to!’ to Todoroki’s simple ‘Thanks for saving my family. I’ll make you proud when I become a full fledged hero.’ all the way to Ashido’s ‘I’ll kick evil’s big, ugly butt in your place, Joker! You can count on me!’.

Ren snorted at Bakugo’s ‘You better win against Yaldabaoth or else. If you ever forget about us, I’ll come over to your world and kick your ass.’

Class 1-B’s messages weren’t as elaborate, a few appreciating his short time as one of their teachers, some thanking him for saving them or their friends during the Summer Camp, but Monoma’s surprised him the most.

‘I’ll make sure that our classes unite as one for the sake of this world’s future. We can’t have Shinsou do all the work for us, after all!’

Midoriya and the others flinched back when he summoned his costume, smiling despite the wetness in his eyes as he closed the notebook, and stuck it in his breast pocket chalk full of treasures.

“I’ll take good care of this.” Joker said softly, “I promise.”

Kirishima sniffled as he lunged at Joker with a giant bear hug, “We’ll never forget you! Ever!!”

Joker laughed as he hugged back.

Kirishima turned his head to the others, “Well!? Am I the only one manly enough to hug him, or what!? C’mon! Group hug!”

Midoriya was the next to join, followed by Yaoyorozu. Iida’s face turned bright red before he wrapped his arms around all of them. Todoroki was the last, face not as bright red as Iida’s, but after a moment of shuffling his feet he joined in, grip soft as if afraid to break them.

Joker basked in it until everyone stepped away.

Yaoyorozu straightened her hair, “Let’s not keep everyone waiting, shall we?”

“We wouldn’t want to be missed!” Iida stated.

Joker nodded and dispelled his costume, the notebook and every other treasure bestowed upon him tucked safely away. Together, they went back into the common room to see the tree mostly finished.

Bakugo was on a step ladder as he held up Eri so she could put the star on the very top. They backed away, and Bakugo nodded at Sero to plug in the tree. It glowed with so many colors, and Ren’s heart softened as Eri’s big eyes drank in each and every light reflecting off of them.

Ren helped Hitoshi and Tsuyu finish hanging up the rest of the lights and tinsel around the dorm, and Eri’s eyes continued to glimmer like stars when they were turned on. Music was played and holiday movies were watched, and everyone in the dorm had a soft smile as Eri absorbed everything.

It was her first Christmas Eve, and they had to make it memorable.

If only her first Christmas wasn't a harsh goodbye from the people she loved most. Bakugo seemed to sense this exact thought floating around Ren's head as, by the time the sun began to set, the boy dragged Ren into the kitchen to begin preparing their dinner.

Feeding forty-one students, plus himself, Eri, and Morgana took a lot of work.

Sato aided them with preparing the turkey and ham. Mashed potatoes and gravy. Cookies, cakes, and brownies. All sorts of bread and rolls. Fried chicken and enough vegetables to feed an entire army. Ren lost count of the amount of pots of coffee and tea he brewed and by the time dinner rolled around the students piled into the kitchen. The ambience was broken by an earth-shattering revelation when Mina held out her mug.

"More coffee, please!" She said, grinning, "Some more of that delicious dark roast stuff! Give me all the caffeine you got, Joker!!"

Ren blinked at her, then laughed.

She pouted, "What is it?"

"Nothing," He shook his head, "But there's a common misconception with darker roasts and the amount of caffeine they have. See, the longer the beans are roasted, the more caffeine is burned off. So to get the most amount of caffeine in a cup of coffee..."

"Wait. Wait wait wait WAIT WAIT!! You need a lighter roast for more caffeine!?" She shrieked and flung her arms to the sky, "MY WHOLE LIFE HAS BEEN A LIE!!"

Bakugo rolled his eyes, “Just give her the darker roast. I don’t think she needs anymore caffeine.”

Mina gave Ren the puppy dog eyes, but he smirked and poured her the darker roast she had before. With a dramatic sigh, she clutched her cup of coffee and chose a seat at one of the tables.

They finished cooking with batches of curry and a half dozen steaming containers of rice by then.

The tables were full and crowded, conversation and laughter bounced around the 1-A dorm as every bite of food was devoured without hesitation.

Ren kept up a smile as the final hours in this world withered away in holiday cheer and companionship. Morgana pressed close to Ren after darkness fell in full.

Then, it happened.

Ren, Bakugo, and a few others were helping wash the mountains of dishes and clean the tables, when Morgana’s ears suddenly perked up.

“What is it?” Ren whispered.

“The front door just opened.” Morgana stated, eyes sharp, “But every student is still here, so who-”

The both of them froze when Oracle walked into the kitchen. She spotted them and grinned. They stared, flabbergasted, as none of the others even noticed her. She walked right between Iida and Kaminari having an argument about proper cleanliness, and they didn’t even react. Their eyes passed over her as if she wasn’t even there.

There was something... off. Her footsteps held no sound, and it was as if they were staring at a shifting mirage of her, rather than her real self. Ren frowned as he activated Third Eye, which revealed that her whole body was encased in a ghostly image of Prometheus, his main body transparent while the designs on him pulsed with so many colors. Ren let it fade, and the phantom shape of Oracle's Persona followed suit.

Her grin widened as she sat at a stool, her finger soundlessly tapping on the counter.

Ren swallowed as he grabbed a clean mug and poured her some coffee. She wordlessly took it and gave it hearty sip, sighing in contentment.

Ren leaned forward and whispered, "Futaba, what-"

She held up a finger, smirking, and finished the rest of her coffee in one gulp. Then, something popped . Like the world shifted, or it just experienced a rewrite in its inner most code. Perhaps this ghostly version of Prometheus lifted from her body. And suddenly, Oracle was fully present with a real weight in the world.

"As usual, Ren, that was delicious!" She cried.

"WHAT THE HELL-" Bakugo startled away from Ren's side, the plate in his grasp shattering on the floor, "WHO THE HELL ARE YOU AND WHERE THE FUCK DID YOU JUST COME FROM !?"

Drawn by the sound of Bakugo's screaming and a plate breaking, everyone not already in the kitchen came rushing in. Eri was held protectively within Hitoshi's grasp, but he paled when his eyes landed on Oracle, similar looks of startled confusion drowning the entire room.

Oracle, slow and deliberate, put down her mug with a loud clink . Her expression melted from happiness and cheer to one of utmost seriousness. She stood from the stool and turned fully towards the large group of students, and Ren gaped when she showed no ounce of hesitation or fear.

“You can call me Oracle, I’m one of Joker’s original teammates from our world.” Startled gasps broke out around the room before she turned to face Ren and Morgana, “Urahara and I finished the temporary world.”

Morgana inhaled sharply as Ren’s heart stopped.

Oracle adjusted her goggles and held Ren’s gaze with steel, “It’s time for the final battle.”

Y'all, I'll be honest. This chapter was so hard on me. Originally the Reaper bit was going to go on the end of last chapter, but that version was so squished and rushed I felt it would've cheated you guys out on a really good part. This Reaper fight was written and rewritten about 4 times, and since I got really sick a couple of chapters ago, I've been really Tired and Struggling. I know some people expected something to happen in regards to Midoriya in the Reaper fight, but after staring/rewriting/reworking this chapter several times for literally 20 hours or more... I'm just Tired XD

On a much more positive note, I can't believe how the update schedule has aligned for the perfect update dates. Not only for this chapter, but a November 20th update for the chapter called Whims Of Fate? Heck yes. The Nanowrimo gods were at least generous enough to allow me to complete the rough draft of the final 2 chapters.

My wonderful betareaders Ghostdoru and Mystik_Owl can probably attest to how much I was screaming/crying in our little chat when I wrote the very final line for the main story :) The epilogue is still a work in progress, but we're almost there you guys!!

NEXT CHAPTER:

Yaldabaoth - December 24th

Yaldabaath

Chapter 98: Yaldabaath

The dragon slowed once the USJ came into view, and Joker looked around the school grounds. The bare forest. The gyms and city sized training grounds. To the Musutafu cityscape that lay past the gates, its denizens still sleepy from the early morning sunrise. Right before Kohryu descended, Joker gazed at the the iconic school building just as the glass sparkled from the light, almost like a wink.

Joker took it as this world saying goodbye to him, too.

December 25 th - Christmas Morning

Eri clung to Joker as he stepped out of the dorms. Her arms were wrapped around his neck, face buried in his shoulder. Pale pinks and purples colored the freshly fallen snow piles and icicles hanging from the edges of the rooftops, streams of dreamy light filtered through the bare branches.

And in the lull of a crisp winter morning, the sound of footsteps marched through the snow. Heroes. Vigilantes. Students. None of these titles mattered. All of them were soldiers walking, heads held high and spirits tempered by their indomitable willpower by the single goal they shared.

Joker stopped before the edge of the path leading away from the dorms. He turned towards the veritable force he gathered, eyes landing on Nezu.

“Everyone, go ahead to the USJ. I need a moment with Eri.”

Eri tightened her grip and pressed her face further into him, sensing their upcoming conversation would not be easy.

“Very well. We’ll meet you there.”

Morgana rubbed his head against Eri’s before he jumped down and shifted into Mona. Together, with Nezu leading the way, everyone stepped around Joker and continued without him. Oracle squeezed his hand before going off with Mona. The presence of this world’s Strength and Hermit waited behind them when the rest disappeared into the distance, as the last bastions of support.

“Eri.”

She whined as she frantically shook her head, her small grip strong enough to nearly choke him.

“I know.” It took every ounce of strength not to make his voice waver, “But we have to let go, Eri.”

He knelt down so she could stand on her own two feet. Slowly, gently, he released his embrace around her and reached up to put his hands on her arms. He didn’t force her away or try to pry her hands off, but he waited patiently for her to do it herself, when she was ready.

For when they were both ready.

He didn’t think either of them would truly be ready, even if they stayed in this spot for an entire lifetime.

Eventually, her arms loosened and she took a tiny step back. The light of the rising sun painted her tears into streams of gold running down her cheeks, droplets falling onto the icy path at their feet. But she didn’t wail or sob loudly, her entire body trembled as the tears simply flowed.

Joker smiled as he reached into his pocket and pulled out a handkerchief to dry her tears, then he put his other hand on the back of her head to press their foreheads together, "I love you, little flower. That won't ever change, okay?"

She hiccuped and pressed her face into the handkerchief as more tears bloomed.

He stood up and turned to look at Kazuya, Risumi, and Ayumu, each of their eyes were already red and puffy, too.

"We'll..." Ayumu cleared his throat, but his voice still trembled, "We'll take good care of her. I promise."

Risumi nodded, "You'll always be with us, right here." Risumi put a hand over her heart, "So you win this battle and reclaim your home. I'm sure there are people who can't wait to see you again."

They both approached him and wrapped him in their arms, and Risumi squeezed extra tight before she let go.

Joker huffed a wet laugh as he turned and met Kazuya's gaze.

He stepped up to Joker and softly chopped Joker's fluffy hair, a gesture Kazuya hadn't done in months. This one felt warm and affectionate.

"... Good luck." Kazuya whispered as he pulled his hand back.

They didn't need any more words. Kazuya's body language, his eyes brimming with tears, said enough. Risumi pressed into Ayumu's side, the both of them grasping Eri's shoulders. Joker bowed to them, before he turned on his heel and walked away.

He was close enough to hear Eri take a deep breath, "I love you too, Ren-nii!!" She screamed at the top of her lungs, "I... I won't ever forget you, either! I-I'll be a good girl, so you don't ever have to worry about me, Ren-nii!"

Joker continued walking, his jaw clenched as she continued.

He had to keep moving forward, for if he dared to look over his shoulder, he'd go back to Eri, Kazuya, Risumi, and Ayumu... and never let go. Joker walked far enough away for her voice to fade with distance, feeling as if someone reached into his chest to rip his heart out.

"... Let's go." Satanael's presence in the mindscape burned with sorrow, "Let's make Yaldabaoth pay."

"Yeah."

"Shall I make the journey shorter?" Kohryu whispered.

Joker pulled Kohryu into reality, the vibrant warm gold of his scales contrasting with the frigid chill of the ethereal snow piles around them. He hopped onto Kohryu's head and the dragon rose into the sky, no doubt being seen by Eri and the others. Kohryu opened his jaws and released a sky shattering roar, a final ode to the world of superheroes. He rose fantastically through the heavens in dramatic sweeps and turns of his body, and the wintry landscape below blended into colorful blurs.

The dragon slowed once the USJ came into view, and Joker looked around the school grounds. The bare forest. The gyms and city sized training grounds. To the Musutafu cityscape that lay past the gates, its denizens still sleepy from the early morning sunrise. Right before Kohryu descended, Joker gazed at the the iconic school building just as the glass sparkled from the light, almost like a wink.

Joker took it as this world saying goodbye to him, too.

They reached the USJ within the next few moments, and Joker dismounted at the entrance with Kohryu returning to him straight after. His soundless footsteps wound their way through the door and down the steps in time to see Oracle and Mona sitting on the edge of the fountain, the students surrounding them with starry eyes.

Teachers and heroes waited around the edge of the group. The Attendants dutifully waited before the rift, the first ones to spot him.

Joker smirked as he compared the scene to a wise teacher sharing an exciting story with kindergartners.

“-and then Ren stepped in front of me to protect me from my uncle. The idiot tried to hit him and missed, and ended up fumbling and falling flat on his face!”

Kaminari leaned forward, “What happened next?”

“Well, he threatened to report to the police saying that Ren punched him, that he would take Sojiro down with him. And I...” Oracle frowned and shook her head, “We couldn’t let that happen. So after some slick Phantom Thievery, we got him to back off.”

“Telling stories, I see.” Joker announced when he got to the bottom of the stairs, drawing every eye in the building towards him.

Oracle snickered, “Sharing prime blackmail material while I have the chance!”

“Oh no, whatever shall I do.” Joker deadpanned.

Oracle smirked, but she and Mona hopped off the fountain and followed him to the line of Attendants, all of them staring up at the rift.

“So,” Joker glanced at Oracle as the small army inched closer, “how are we going to get there, Oracle?”

“And where’s Skull?” Mona asked, “He obviously didn’t come with you.”

“Skull went to get Noir and Panther. Urahara went to get Fox and Queen while Yoruichi is already waiting with the others from the world we were stuck in. Now, for the Keywords!” Oracle grinned at

Joker as he retrieved his phone, “Put everything in like this - Target: World, Door: Velvet Room, Core: Arcana, Location: The End.”

“The End?” Mona’s smile turned wry, “Really? That’s a bit on the nose, don’t you think?”

“What?” Oracle grinned, “‘The End’ sounds final, you know? Blame Urahara for wanting to make it so dramatic.”

Joker snorted as he put the words into the app and, like before, the rift split open in a vast and unending pool of night. The students gasped as reality bent and distorted right before their eyes. But unlike before, the descending golden staircase was a bright cerulean blue, and moved like shifting streams of fire. Joker took the first step up before he turned to face the gathered crowd.

“Anyone having second thoughts, this is your chance to step away.” He projected his voice across the central plaza. Nobody moved. Pleased, he nodded and turned around, his coattails billowing, “Stick close together, keep moving, and don’t stray from the path unless you want to be erased from existence.”

“Easy peasy!” Oracle said as remnants of horror dotted many of the younger faces, while heroes and vigilante alike hardened in determination.

Joker was the first into the blackness, followed closely by Mona, Oracle, and the Attendants. Hitoshi and the vigilantes were a few steps behind them, then the heroes and teachers sprinkled in with groups of students last.

“What’s this fake world supposed to look like, anyway?” Mona asked as they walked over the undulating fire.

“Muehehehe... You’ll just have to see for yourself. Urahara is really proud of it, and I think it’ll make a fitting final battle arena!”

The path of flame wound through the darkness, thankfully wide enough to have plenty of room for the large group to comfortably walk without fear of being pushed or falling by accident.

“There!” Oracle pointed after a few more minutes, “Pretty close in likeness, huh?”

Joker stopped before the Velvet Room Door floating ominously in the space.

“A decent copy,” Margaret said in a neutral tone.

“It’d fool a lot of people, but not us.” Elizabeth added ruefully.

“It serves its purpose.” Theodore frowned at it, “For an imitation, it’s not bad.”

Lavenza smiled at Joker, “If you will do the honors, Trickster?”

Joker opened it. The rattle of chains resounded through the void before Joker stepped through first, followed by the rest in small groups. He found himself standing upon a rooftop straight from Musutafu and, judging by the gasps of several people behind him, everyone else noticed its likeness too.

Sharp whispers of wind came from above, and Joker’s eyes widened when he saw people wearing black shihakusho... standing in mid-air. He recognized Kurosaki and Rukia, and the red-haired man from last time, but the others were complete strangers who kept their distance.

“What the...” Hitoshi trailed off behind Joker, “Now that’s just cheating.”

Two figures appeared in front of them in the same swish of air. One was Urahara, but the other woman Joker almost didn’t recognize, if it weren’t for the sharp golden gaze that could only belong to Yoruichi. In this form, she was slender yet fit, her waist-length dark hair tied back in a ponytail. Like the people standing in mid-air above them, she wore dark clothes, though hers was sleeveless and backless, but Joker recognized one of Ishtar's Goddess Horns hanging from her belt.

"About time you arrived with your war party, Oracle!" The woman stated with a teasing grin.

"Hey!" Oracle pouted, "It's not my fault that time runs differently in all the worlds!"

"Everyone else?" Joker stepped forward, staring at Urahara.

His playfulness dropped with a firm nod, "Your world is the last to arrive. What do you want to do first, Joker?"

Joker looked to the sky. "I'm going to get a sense of this place. Yoruichi, can you gather the other Phantom Thieves and the worlds' liaisons and bring them here?"

"Got it!" Yoruichi winked at him, "Shouldn't take more than a few minutes."

She vanished in another wisp of wind.

"Oracle, La Brava, can you start setting up lines of communication?"

"No problem!" Oracle summoned Prometheus around her, and La Brava sat under Prometheus' shadow and opened her laptop.

"Hawks, Nezu, Mona, Lavenza, with me." Joker turned to the group behind him, "The rest of you, stay here until we figure out a battle plan."

He didn't wait for his orders to be followed as he released his Personas unto this false world, bursts of blue flame and deities darting off in all directions to explore their soon-to-be-battlefield. Kohryu was the last, and several of the Shinigami above darted away to give him space.

Joker jumped on Kohryu's head with Lavenza, Nezu, and Mona, while Hawks took off on fiery wings. Kohryu paused to stare at one of the Shinigami, a young boy with white hair and ice blue eyes. Joker shivered as a feeling of familiarity and happiness poked at him, but he shook it off as Kohryu ascended high into the heavens.

"What was that about?" Joker asked him.

"Nothing, Trickster." Kohryu said as he injected amusement into his tone, "Just one soul of a dragon greeting another."

Joker frowned in confusion, but let it go when the buildings became small, and his friends and the Shinigami were nothing more than vague dots below.

"Whoa... this is..." Mona gaped as he looked around.

"Holy shit." Hawks muttered as he floated beside Kohryu's head, the whistling wind threading through their hair and clothes.

"How in the world did Oracle and Urahara just... make this?" Joker whispered.

It was as if someone had spliced real pieces of these worlds together. Four total sections spread out like a splayed fan under a stark blue sky, and in total it looked to be the size of Shinjuku. Musutafu lay below them, and in the direction where the Shinigami came from was another city, and if it wasn't for the vast difference in how the buildings were constructed- Musutafu's metropolis styled skyscrapers to Karakura Town's smaller buildings surrounded by greenery and mountains- they wouldn't know any better.

Amestris' cold stones and old time infrastructures melded with Karakura's mountain greenery, and Mephisto's school grounds after that. In the far distance, at the base of this otherworldly 'fan' lay a large indent, rounded and deep like a bowl. The sand dunes surrounding it were bleached of any life and color, but several oval shaped towers and jutting buildings of all sizes rose out of it. These structures were dotted within the other landscapes, but grew larger the closer they were to the center.

Platforms to climb up, perhaps? The largest of the buildings were clustered all around an enormous dais at the center.

"These worlds aren't just mashed together." Messiah Picaro hovered between the precipice of Karakura and Musutafu, "Rather, they are woven together like the edges of a fine silk robe."

"One piece slowly bleeding into the other at the edges, until each piece regains itself once more." Futsunushi clarified at the borders of True Cross and Amestris, "Urahara's genius knows no bounds. His intelligence may even outmatch Nezu's, and paired with Oracle and Prometheus, they made something truly remarkable."

"Creating an entirely separate world?" Cybele snorted as she and Attis explored Amestris' rooftops, "It's something the rat would never be capable of by himself."

"Bah! Give the Devil some credit!" Beelzebub snapped, "He runs a school the size of a metropolis, and if he had Oracle's aid then there's no doubt he could create something like this as well!"

"But what of this white area with the pillars?" Sandalphon asked.

"Perhaps it's where Yaldabaoth is meant to be summoned. That large indent could mitigate the Malevolent God's size, if only a little." Satanael looked around the melded landscapes, "All of these areas are positioned around it, after all, and those pale structures could serve as suitable stepping stones to reach Yaldabaoth."

Joker was drawn out of his thoughts by the rush of air that signaled Yoruichi and Urahara's appearance.

"Get a good enough look?" Urahara said with a cheeky grin.

"Yeah, it's pretty impressive." Joker said.

Yoruichi elbowed Urahara when he preened like a rooster. He wheezed and stepped away from her, rubbing at the spot with a childish pout. She returned her grin to Joker, "The others are all waiting below. Whenever you're ready, kid!"

Yoruichi disappeared, and Urahara followed her seconds later.

"What a pair they make." Nezu stated as he clasped his paws together.

Hawks snorted as he looked down, "Well? The party won't start without us."

"Right." Joker put a hand to the dragon's horn, "Kohryu?"

The great golden dragon's throat rumbled as he descended, as slow as a flower petal drifting on a breeze. Joker stepped off onto the rooftop to see the various groups mingling together, a soft smile worming on his face when he saw Skull wrap an arm around Midoriya's shoulders, the pair bearing equal grins.

Fox was in a deep conversation with the Iida brothers, with the younger Tenya chopping his arms in rapid discussion. Whatever topic they were on, Fox leaned forward with a hand on his chin, completely engaged.

Noir and Queen chatted with Yaoyorozu, Midnight, and a grinning Miruko.

Panther giggled as she spoke with Hitoshi and Aizawa, with Hitoshi almost turned red while Aizawa held a satisfied smirk.

"Eugh, I never want to travel like that again." Edward muttered as he looked a little green.

"That's fine." Yoruichi grinned as she patted him on the back, turning her sharp gaze to Alphonse, "You'd have to be a spirit to learn it anyway."

“... We'll pass.” Alphonse stated as he took an extra step away.

“I'm afraid there's only room for one on this chair.” Mephisto smirked as he tipped his hat at them, “Which I'll be using from now on instead of the vanishing ghost trick you used to drag me here.”

“It's not a ‘vanishing ghost trick!’” Yoruichi cried, “It's Shunpo!”

“Fine then.” Mephisto's smirk widened further, “I'll be resorting to this chair rather than ‘Shunpo’ aka the vanishing ghost trick .”

“As the Goddess of Flash,” A challenging gleam sparked in Yoruichi's eyes, “Those are fighting words, you know.”

“Or just grow a pair of wings, like me!” Hawks stated, beaming bright as he fanned out his majestic feathers, separating Yoruichi and Mephisto.

“Right, because everyone can just grow a pair of wings.” Edward deadpanned.

Nezu clapped his paws together, “I believe we have important matters to discuss?”

The sound halted the nearby conversations, and the original Phantom Thieves beamed at the sight of their leader.

“Joker! Mona!” Panther ran to him and wrapped her arms around him.

Joker grinned as he hugged her back, smiling, “I take it your mission went well?”

“Totally!” She hopped back with a warm grin.

Noir ran a finger under her hat, “Thankfully, it wasn't too difficult to gather allies.”

“Same here!” Skull grinned as he looked to the sky, where a few of the Shinigami still lingered. He waved, and Kurosaki returned the gesture, “We’re all ready and rearing to kick ass!”

Fox chuckled, “Indeed. Now, we only need the final guest to arrive.”

“Right.” Queen cracked her knuckles, “What’s that plan, Joker?”

Joker pointed to the sandy white area with the towers, “That’s where Yaldabaoth will be brought, right?”

Urahara adjusted his hat, “That’s right.”

“Placing everybody too close to Yaldabaoth at the start would be a sure way to get people killed, so we’ll use the surrounding areas and close in on him like a net.” Joker clutched his chin, “How’s it looking, Oracle?”

“Great!” Oracle smiled at him, “La Brava and I established basic lines of communication across the four worlds, but it’ll be messy and confusing if we plug everyone in all at once.”

“How do you want to do this?” La Brava asked as she looked up from her laptop.

“By establishing a chain of command, with each part of the chain having separate branches below it.”

“I see where this is headed.” Urahara said, his shadowy eyes glinting, “Who will be the leaders, aside from you being at the top?”

Joker scanned the group, “The world leaders will be Urahara, Edward, and Mephisto. You know your own people best, and will be able to organize them better than me. Nezu, too, of course. Oracle, if you would connect these four to me?”

“Got it!” Holographic screens appeared around her and she got to work. Joker felt his scalp prickle and Oracle looked to one of the monitors with a map. A single gold dot appeared, surrounded by the four orange World Leaders.

“Connected!” Oracle chirped, “Next?”

“The other Phantom Thieves and the Attendants, put them on the same wavelength.”

Oracle nodded and resumed her work.

“This is so exciting!” Panther said as she clasped her hands together.

“Right!?” Skull shouted, “I can hardly wait!”

Noir’s sweet giggle sent the hair on Joker’s arms standing up straight, and to witness horror on the nearby hero students’ face was gold, “I’m excited to see the agony on these Shadows’ faces. And Yaldabaoth’s too, of course!”

Edward blanched as Mephisto’s devious smirk stretched from one pointy ear to the other.

“Oh?” Elizabeth stepped closer, “How are we to fight in this battle, Trickster?”

“Ideally, one Attendant per world to help push past the Shadows and reach Yaldabaoth in a timely manner.” Joker looked between Elizabeth and Mona, “You two will stay in this region to help. Theodore, you go with Edward and Alphonse to help Fox and Queen. Lavenza, you’re with Urahara, Yoruichi, and Skull. Margaret is with Mephisto, Noir, and Panther.”

The Attendants arranged themselves with their assigned World Leaders, and the other Phantom Thieves followed suit.

The tingling in their skulls intensified for a moment, and several velvety blue dots spread out on Oracle’s map.

“Is that all of us?” Fox asked.

“Yep!” Oracle chirped as she looked expectantly at Joker, “Should I connect each World Leader to the people they’ve brought here?”

“Do it.”

“Understood.”

“What will you be doing through all of this, Joker?” Alphonse asked.

Joker grinned, “I’ll draw Yaldabaoth’s attention, and while I do that the rest of you keep pushing forward. With any luck, everyone will overpower the Shadows and converge in the center for the final assault on Yaldabaoth himself. I’ll meet you all there.”

Urahara hid his face behind a fan, “So many different people from all worlds, and all walks of life and death, fighting together against a common enemy... it’ll be a sight to behold.”

“It’ll make a marvelous story to tell over tea!” Mephisto said.

“Hmmm, indeed.” Nezu whispered.

“Just don’t do something stupid and die.” Edward crossed his arms and scowled.

“Too late for that, squirt.” Yoruichi smirked, “Some of us are already dead, in a sense.”

Edward rolled his eyes, “You know what I mean, cat lady.”

“Hey,” Oracle interrupted, “We’re ready to connect people to the World Leaders, if you guys are prepared?”

Urahara, Nezu, Mephisto, and Edward exchanged glances.

“Ready.” Edward said.

The others gave their confirmation, and Oracle tapped a few keys. The World Leaders lightly clutched their head as a static chill swept over this false world, there and gone again just as fast. Joker noticed the people he'd brought over from the superhero world shifted too, some rubbing their temples or staring at Oracle in shock.

Several... dozens... over a hundred green dots lit up Oracle's map.

"Huh, neat." Hawks muttered as he stared strangely at Nezu.

Urahara snapped his fan shut, "Well, our fighters won't organize themselves! Yoruichi, Lavenza?"

"Right." Yoruichi raised a brow at Lavenza, "You already saw how most of the Shinigami use a technique that lets them stand mid-air. Do you need any help keeping up with us?"

"I do not." Lavenza smiled as she flipped open the Compendium to summon her steed in a flash of cerulean.

Seiryu was a Chinese dragon with beautiful blue scales, a bright red underbelly, branch-like horns, and a vivid green mane. Though Seiryu was smaller than Kohryu, much like a baby snake compared to a fully grown anaconda, he would be no less ferocious, and certainly a fine steed for Lavenza.

She sat side-saddle between Seiryu's shoulders, casting a long gaze at Joker, "If any man could win this unjust game, Trickster, I've always believed it to be you." She glanced at Urahara, "Shall we?"

Urahara grinned before he vanished in a burst of Shunpo. Yoruichi snickered as she followed him, and Seiryu took off towards Karakura Town.

Skull grinned at the Phantom Thieves, "See ya on the flip side!"

He jumped off the side of the building, and Joker's eyes widened when he flew off with Seiten Taisei, balancing on the cloud with practiced ease next to his Persona.

Fox hummed, "It seems Joker isn't the only one who learned new tricks."

"We learned a lot, too." Queen adjusted her scarf and set off, "Let's not keep the others waiting!"

"Let's go, Al." Edward turned towards the edge of the roof where Fox and Queen were already going ahead, "You too, Theodore."

Theodore glanced at Joker as Edward and Alphonse jumped across the rooftops, "We will see you at the end, Joker."

Joker nodded, and he watched them go.

"We can't be late to our own party, especially one as important as this!" Mephisto smirked at Margaret as he crossed his legs, "Think you can keep up, Miss Margaret?"

Margaret smiled as she let go of her Compendium. It floated by her side, its pages open and flipping rapidly, her feet lifting off the ground, her hair floating as if she were underwater.

"Worry about yourself, Mephisto." She said before she flew towards the True Cross area in a blast of wind.

Mephisto sputtered as he held on to his hat, "H-hey! Wait for me!"

Noir sighed, while Panther rolled her eyes. The pair waved at Joker before they were the last to set off.

Joker shook his head as he watched the purple and orange dots situate themselves on Oracle's map, quickly organizing into formations and different teams spreading out around their respective areas. Nezu and La Brava had their heads together as they directed everybody from the superhero world.

And Oracle listened to it all, lips a thin line of concentration. She glanced at Joker before she tapped a few of her keys, and several white dots appeared on the map.

"I'll keep track of your Personas, too." She said at Joker's raised brow, "Just to keep the World Leaders informed of which Personas are where."

"I have a question, Oracle." Mona whispered at Joker's side, "How are you going to get Yaldabaoth here? You said we would bring him here, but..."

Oracle lowered her head, her goggles eerily reflecting the light of her monitors, "You'll see soon enough."

Mona blinked, "Okay, we trust you." He turned to Joker and looked up, his eyes shifting in concern, "I suppose... we better get ourselves situated, then?"

"Yeah." Joker grinned as he held his fist down to Mona, "But I'm not worried. See you soon?"

"You bet." Mona's gaze hardened as he fist-bumped Joker, "See you soon!"

"As if you'd lose, Joker." Elizabeth chuckled, "I look forward to our victory."

Even Hawks gave Joker one long, hard look before he flew off to his designated spot.

"Joker," Nezu laced his paws together, "I'll be staying with La Brava and Oracle to help navigate our forces, and to provide intel when needed. If you want to draw Yaldabaoth's attention, then you should situate yourself in a central area. Preferably somewhere high up."

"There's a spot here." Oracle pointed to her map. "It's connected with the white buildings in a path that leads straight to Yaldabaoth's area."

“I’ll make my way there.” Joker grinned as he studied this group, with Nezu’s sharpness, Oracle’s grim seriousness, and La Brava’s bravery injected into her glistening eyes as she watched him turn away.

Joker shot out his grapple. He worked his way towards the spot Oracle pointed out, a tall skyscraper near the edge of the Musutafu area. And like Oracle stated, it would only take a good, hearty leap to reach the white buildings arranged in a way that was a clear path to where Yaldabaoth would be.

He stood at the edge of the worlds, a land where time and space were but base ingredients to create the battlefield to take down a false god. Joker’s hands formed into fists as his heart hardened in resolve. This imitation would be Yaldabaoth’s final resting place, a grave soon to be turned to dust itself.

“Which of us shall join you on this final assault, Joker?” Odin asked.

“Satanael, in his full size.”

“Of course.” Satanael smirked as he returned to the mindscape, “There will be no greater surprise than that.”

“Amaterasu, if you will?”

Amaterasu whisked herself away from reality, through the mindscape, and appeared at Joker’s side in moments. She placed a soft hand on his shoulder, “It would be my honor.”

With Amaterasu being the life giving heartbeat to keep himself and all of his Personas charged with life and magic, and with Satanael being their beacon to attract Yaldabaoth’s attention...

“Lakshmi, for debuffs and additional support. Zaou-Gongen for overwhelming physical force.” The pair appeared, with Zaou-Gongen opposite of Amaterasu and Lakshmi behind him, “And finally, if Yaldabaoth decides to overwhelm us in Shadows, Kohryu.”

"I will be the spear that breaks through the horde?" Kohryu flew like a golden ribbon towards Joker, the eyes of many across the different worlds looking up at his majesty in awe. He hovered in the wispy clouds, but by instinct he left enough room for Satanael to appear right behind Joker, "Very well, then I shall prepare ahead of time! Allow me to be the stepping stone towards our path to ultimate victory!"

Kohryu's body sparked a light blue from Concentrate, and he began to build a Celestial Ray within his throat. Every Persona offered their magic, swirls of elemental colors bleeding into it as it gathered power.

"The rest of you, fight alongside the people from other worlds. Don't let a single Shadow escape your grasp!"

His mindscape harmonized as one being, a song of battle and victory flowing their veins, demanding recompense from the false god who was finally getting his dues.

"Whoa, Joker..." Oracle whispered, "Your power levels are rising, way waaay off the charts!"

"Just giving my Personas a little pep talk, that's all."

Oracle laughed, "Well, the World Leaders almost have everyone in position. Do you want to say something before we bring Yaldabaoth here? Maybe give some of that buzzing energy to everyone with an inspiring speech?"

"Sure," Joker smirked, and took a deep breath, "Patch me through."

"Got it! Aaaaand... you're live!"

"My name is Joker, and I am the Leader of the Phantom Thieves. Whether you forged strong bonds with me, or made friends with Oracle and Skull, steady allies of Panther and Noir, or comrades in arms with Fox and Queen... many of you don't know me personally, but you know them . All of us are here for one reason: To show Yaldabaoth and his minions that he has no right to insert himself as Ruler of our worlds! Our homes, our loved ones, are counting on us to win this battle once and for all!” He waved an arm towards the pale towers that would serve as Yaldabaoth's grave, “Now, let’s unite our Hearts and fight together as one!”

This false world rippled with noise. Whether Fafnir’s howls joined with Queen and Edward’s battle cries, or Cybele and Attis as they watched Riza Hawkeye smile in pride next to her Colonel, among others dressed in the blue military attire.

Mother Harlot raised her cup next to a pair of twin brothers, one glowing with blue fire while holding a sword, the other checking to make sure his angelic gun was loaded. Beezlebub’s wings buzzed as Mephisto grinned with Panther, Noir, and Margaret, standing before others ready to fight.

A heavy sea of energy pressed down on Hastur and Messiah Picaro as Urahara raised his blade with the other Shinigami. They witnessed Lavenza smile as the small collections of humans with strange powers did the same, all of them enhanced by pieces of Joker’s soul.

And finally, Joker’s entire being seemed to vibrate under the energy bursting forth from his Arcanas like an open floodgate, both Futsunushi and Loa present to witness their loyalty and love in its purest form.

“Now, Oracle, we can’t do this without the guest of honor, can we?”

“One ‘guest of honor’ coming right up! Get ready, everyone!”

A pulsating hum trickled through the world like a heartbeat. Joker’s eyes widened when he felt the steady rhythm crawl up his boots and shins, and at the same moment bright green lines of light threaded through each and every surface, every nook and cranny of each world sewn together, looking much like the designs on Prometheus.

The sight was breathtaking. A true monument to Oracle's astounding powers.

The green light converged at the center, in a sigil overlapping the area of white sands and stone, each line lightening and darkening in tune to the magnetic pulse thrumming within the bones, the very fabric that made this temporary world. It twisted and convulsed until the energy flooded the sky and drowned the streets around Joker. A rising tower of beautiful aurora.

Joker's breath caught as a geyser of black shadow coalesced within the green, growing larger as Oracle's power dug its claws in and reeled . An ocean's worth of darkness burst like an exploding dam, revealing a form that would've struck true fear within Joker not a few weeks ago.

A screeching metallic wail cut through Joker as a gargantuan being of cold silver appeared, with a faceless mask and a halo of white wings. Pain and confusion laced Yaldabaoth's cry as he grasped his head with a pair of hands, one pair of three .

He was enormous at the last battle in Tokyo, but this... this was more. A symbol of his new strength. Six wings -two of which were the same red and gold wings from before, while the other four, situated above and below in pairs, were sterling silver- stretched across either sides of the world, the bulk of his silver body encompassing the horizon line.

Something hung from Yaldabaoth's back and the warped angles of silver metal that served as his legs. Cables or perhaps... veins? Hundreds. Thousands . Wriggling and thrashing like serpents with their heads cut off, drowning the whiteness under Yaldabaoth with an endless black deluge.

Already, a lake of ink formed in the bowled shape beneath Yaldabaoth by the time Joker squared his shoulders, forcing the powers of the burning Arcanas into a whisper.

“Satanael .”

Yaldabaoth zeroed in on Joker with that single uttered word.
Confusion turned to shock .

Satanael rose to the challenge in a blue wave of flame, vast black wings rising in contrast to Yaldabaoth’s angelic silver.

“You have six wings now, Yaldabaoth?” Satanael smiled at the irony, “There’s a human saying about imitation being the sincerest form of flattery, but I’m not impressed. Mere copies will never stand up to the original.”

Yaldabaoth... stared . As if unable to comprehend the truth before him. He trembled in the purest rage, his next scream engulfing the worlds in suffocating hatred. The blue sky wavered as Yaldabaoth poured his power through, choking the blue until it melted away to be overtaken by red .

Oracle gasped, “Shadows incoming! What- their numbers-”

The lake of Shadows under Yaldabaoth undulated, a thousand ripples that birthed an army of faceless angels, their bodies dripping with black sludge before spreading their holy wings and taking to the sky. So much silver surrounded Yaldabaoth that they blotted out the red sky, just as the first drops of bloody rain pattered by Joker’s feet. The wind turned rotten when the tsunami of Shadows surged in all directions, with a destructive wave headed straight for Joker.

“Kohryu!”

The golden dragon opened his jaws and fired, a searing ray of all elemental magics burned away the Red Rain, vaporizing any weak Shadows in its path, and hit Yaldabaoth in the chest. It struck with the force of a hurricane, the sound hitting everyone’s ears like a deep gong. Yaldabaoth screeched as he fell forward, stunned with his wings drooping, and Joker took the chance.

Joker thrust his arm forward, “Everyone, attack! ”

The Shadows met his challenge head on, filling in any openings to protect their master while he was down. Their numbers were so great and terrible it was like watching a mountain of angry ants scramble, dousing the skylines in red and twinkling silver.

Kohryu snarled and surged forward, jaws snapping at the swell of Shadows.

“This will be fun!” Zaou-Gongen roared as Joker took a running start and jumped off the building, shooting his grapple to snap around Kohryu’s back leg.

Kohryu reared up as Joker swung across the worlds, white sands and bleached buildings flying under his feet.

“Stay out of our way!” Amaterasu cried as she waved her hand, a small sun burning through the swarm that tried to overtake Joker.

Satanael chuckled as his massive shadow fell over them, grasping his bladed gun with certain intent, all of them aware of the sacred duty it shouldered on this day, “Keep going forward, Joker! We’ll cover you as much as we can!”

“Right!”

“None shall stop our advance!” Lakshmi danced through the air when Joker released his grapple and plummeted towards the pale towers, rolling into his landing and bursting forth into a run, “Not now, and not ever again!”

Her rapid debuffs weakened the surging Shadows. Zaou-Gongen snarled and sent forth a devastating wave of Gigantomachia, Amaterasu with her command over the boiling sun, and Kohryu covering their backs with claws and magic alike.

Satanael dutifully followed Joker as he raised his gun and shot, the next small group of Shadows screaming their death throes when the lightning of a Riot Gun eliminated them.

“It is our destined battle.” Satanael said with a smirk, “It would be uncouth for us to be late for it again.”

Joker howled with laughter as he jumped to the next building, “You almost sound corny when you put it like that!”

“I have no regrets.”

“Of course you don’t. I don’t have any either.”

Joker’s footsteps quickened when Yaldabaoth began to stir, the world starting to bloom with bone white spires and crawling bridges of spines and jutting ribs. He glared at Yaldabaoth, his maskless face revealing the full brunt of his emotions, “Let’s go, Satanael!”

“Go, Mercurius !!” Mona cried.

Mercurius cut his staff through the air, summoning a raging green tornado to rip the feathers out of Cherub and Angel wings alike, and cracking the delicate glass of the Virtues.

Mona cursed under his breath as the defeated Shadows were replaced just as fast. The swing of his scimitar and Mercurius’ winds seemed to do little to cull their numbers, despite the sounds of battle echoing around the Musutafu area.

He sensed the swells of magic, heard the screaming cries of valor and felt the deep trembles of battle through the earth.

“They don’t know when to quit.” Elizabeth smirked as the next wave of Shadows showed themselves. She opened her compendium, “Why don’t you deal with them, Yoshitsune?”

The famed Japanese general appeared at her back, dual swords swinging. The Shadows didn't have time to scream in agony as eight slashes rent through the streets in front of them.

Mona snickered as all was quiet... for the moment. "Nice work."

Elizabeth rolled her eyes, "Please, these guys were pushovers."

"Joker..."

They looked up at Oracle's voice, the fetid wind and hellish skies making them shiver, to see Satanael. The massive Persona advanced towards Yaldabaoth and the rolling clouds of Shadows around him, and from the magic Mona sensed, Joker and a few of his other Personas were battling it out on the white towers.

"Come on." Elizabeth stepped ahead of Mona, "We can't let Joker be the only one to move forward."

"Elizabeth is right!" Oracle cried.

"We all believe in Joker." Nezu stated evenly, "But even so, let's prove to him that he won't face Yaldabaoth alone!"

"All teams have cleared the first wave of Shadows, but they won't hold out forever! Everyone, follow Joker's example and advance while you can!" La Brava added.

"Right. Let's go!" Mona cried as he and so many others pressed the attack.

"Oracle, a question."

"Do you really have the time for a question, Fox!?"

Fox chuckled as he lowered his hands, previously framed towards Joker and Satanael to preserve every detail in his memory. A true Demon Lord facing down a corrupt God and his army of Angels, the bloody sky casting them in a hazy spray of crimson, but it was the fearlessness in the face of such an overpowering enemy that captured Fox's attention the most.

It would make an enthralling painting among so many others he had inspirations for.

"Fine." Fox jumped down onto the street, Susano-o's magnificent cape billowing as he followed. The crackle of ice followed in their wake, frost seeping under their footsteps to lock this part of 'Amestris' in wintry harshness. Susano-o's pleasure was his own as the Persona sliced apart any Shadows captured in the ice, "More of an observation, then."

"Oh, get it over with already! What 'observation', Inari?"

"Did you purposely put Joker in a place where he could easily be seen by each area?"

"W-well, that's-!"

"It's totally something you would do." Queen said, voice breathless but tinged in amusement.

The rev of metal and flashing neon blue told him she was just one street over, the other side exploding with fire and the pop of gunshots. Cross and her team were behind him by a block or two, finishing off some weaker Shadows.

Edward, Theodore, and the others weren't too far either.

"We have to keep up morale somehow!" Oracle sputtered, "And what better morale boost is there than seeing our Leader kick ass!?"

"I suppose you have a point."

Fox stopped at an intersection of cobblestone streets, the beginning of where Amestris ended and the white pillars began. It seems he was the first of the Amestris inhabitants to reach it, the steps he needed to take to join his Leader in the final assault.

“Of course, it wouldn’t be that easy.” Fox said with a sigh.

At the base of the white pillar, a large black pool roiled. He chuckled as he waved his arm in an arc, Susano-o raising his blade as the shining silver shell of a Shadow burst out. Spires of ice sprouted to trap the angel where it hovered, and Fox ran forward, up the ice, and ripped off its blank silver mask.

He jumped back when the Shadow contorted, black sludge splashing as it turned into a legless angel with blue skin and six yellow wings. A few more Angels that weren’t their versions of Angels followed it, making four adversaries in total.

Fox laughed as a cold grin snaked its way on his face, his hand going to his katana, “Hmm, a different lead Shadow compared to the weaker ones from before, but no matter. You’ll be eliminated all the same! Your beautiful death knell will be the stepping stone towards my Leader’s true victory!”

The Shadows’ faces contorted in rage as they lunged. The sound of Susano-o’s blade striking the angels was music to their ears, the frigid ting of their natural ice magic and the hissing flames born from the ring on Fox’s finger were but added tunes in the orchestra of battles around them.

“Hey, that one was mine!”

Odin sighed as the corpses of the angelic Shadows disintegrated, tilting his head in the smallest angle for the sandal to hurl past his head and create a small crater in the wall behind him.

“Hiyori.” The blonde man with the pharaoh mask stuttered, “How about we try not ta piss off the god helpin’ us?”

“Shut up, Baldie! That Hollow knock-off was as good as mine and you know it!”

Skull groaned, “Things never change with you guys, huh?”

“My, my...” Urahara jumped down from the rooftop, coat billowing between Hiyori and Odin, “Let’s not anger one god while trying to kill another, hmm? Besides, company incoming!”

As if on cue, more Shadows poured from the writhing cloud above like blood drenched pearls. Urahara smirked as he disappeared in a flash of Shunpo, black blood staining his fingers as their masks were tossed on the ground. The angel Shadows fell with splats of black dripping from their feathers.

“Now, Seiten Taisei!”

Skull’s Persona, backed by Odin raising his mighty spear, struck with lightning. Skull grinned as he used his shiny new Gigantomachia Belt, crackles of gold and rupturing earth ripping the Shadows asunder. The small group of Angels who dodged the slaughter cried out in fear as they scuttled away, but there was no escape for them, either.

Urahara stood behind them and raised Benihime to the sky, his eyes glimmering in a hungry, bloodthirsty red. The cursed ring on his finger glimmered ominously. Straw dolls surrounded in balls of fire and bloody handprints appeared before the Shadows, run through several times by needles. The remaining Angels were slain in a rush of blood and cursed energy.

“Show off.” Hirako muttered.

Hiyori scoffed, “I’m going ahead!”

She pulled her bone-white mask onto her face and shot off. Hirako muttered something under his breath before he followed her down the street.

“You good, Hat an’ Clogs?” Skull asked when they were alone, save for the Personas.

The man stared oddly at the ring on his finger, the eager bloodlust in his eyes fading, “Yes.” He lowered his sword, that playful smirk plastered on his face, “I’ll admit, Benihime was pretty upset when I couldn’t rely on her full power for this.”

“Okay. And?”

Urahara shrugged, then turned towards the center of this false world. They were close to the first white towers in this part of town, “She’s still not happy, but at least she’s satisfied that this cursed ring is causing so much death in her stead.”

“Riiight.” Skull took a step closer to Odin and Seiten Taisei. “Guess that could be said for everyone, huh?”

In the distance, a Getsuga Tensho laced with a Maieha rose and fell like a tidal wave.

A rising pillar of ice signaled Rukia’s location without having to ask Oracle, and Skull knew she had one of the frozen flowers that Panther and Mr. Compress held.

A mix of gold and white lightning sparked on their other side, among so many others wielding different elements woven into their natural abilities.

Skull never really got used to sensing Spiritual Pressure as well as Oracle did, but even he could tell that the others’ powers and the magic of their Leader’s soul blended together for the sole purpose of winning this war.

“Let’s not dawdle.” Seiten Taisei said, spinning his spiked pole in his grasp, “More Shadows await!”

“Oooh, how fun!” Urahara nodded and walked forward with Skull.

Skull stopped after a few more steps, “Yo, Odin! You comin’ or what?”

“... Of course.”

Odin trailed after them. He refused to be the one to tell that tiny masked girl that her abandoned sandal was ruined in the puddles of red.

“Whoopsie, you missed again!” Mephisto cackled in his throne, wiping away his gleeful tears with a gloved hand.

“Foul demon.” The Shadow hissed, “When my Lord rules over your realm, I can promise that all of your kind will be eradicated first and foremost!”

Mephisto narrowed his eyes. This angel was a little bit tougher than the weird legless ones with six wings, having a full body with four scarlet wings. In one hand he bore a long, curved horn.

“What was your name again?” Mephisto asked.

“Remiel.” The Shadow narrowed its eyes, “And I have seen the future my Lord brings. All demons shall burn in holy fire!”

Mephisto yawned.

The angel snarled and was about to make a retort, when the tap tap of a cane echoed nearby. Mephisto blinked when a small fly buzzed by his ear to land on his throne’s arm rest, wings flicking. Then another, and another. More until they grew into a buzzing swarm that surrounded the Remiel.

“What-” Remiel flapped his wings, but the winds didn’t deter the flies as they crawled over him in such a number that their combined hum made Mephisto’s teeth chatter.

Black blood dripped and the angel screamed, something raw and horrible shrieking from its throat. The crawling form plummeted to the earth, and the flies scattered before they hit the ground. Not a scrap was left of that angel as the pests dispersed to seek out other prey.

“Hmph.” Beelzebub emerged from the shadows, along with another that made Mephisto shiver, “I bet he didn’t see that, did he? Mephisto, stop playing with your enemies.”

“I wasn’t playing! Just trying to gather intel. That one was new, wasn’t he?”

“And did you gather such valuable intel?” Noir asked.

“Well, no. He was being stingy.”

“Hmmm.” Noir balanced her bardiche over her shoulders, the look in her shadowed eyes was one that caused all beings, be they demon, human, or angel, to fear for their lives, “Our goal is to press forward to aid Joker, not mess around.”

Mephisto sighed. “Dare I waste Oracle’s precious time asking where everyone is? The other World Leaders informed me our valiant fighters are becoming more scattered as the battles continue.”

“Oh, Panther stayed with Shiemi to see to any injuries, but they should catch up soon. Yukio and Rin went ahead.” None of them flinched when a Megidolaon shook the ground, the shock wave washing over them in a sickly wind. Noir didn’t even look bothered as the light faded behind her, though she held her hat to keep it from blowing away, “Margaret is in that direction.”

“You don’t say.” Mephisto muttered.

Noir frowned as she looked at the closing distance between Yaldabaoth and Satanael. Reality pulled and contorted in multiple colors as Kohryu eradicated the next cloud of Shadows with powerful Psy magic, only for the Shadows be replaced by more. So many types of magic ebbed and flowed in beautiful harmony, a kaleidoscope of flashing colors and coalesced power thrummed in opposition to the red rain.

Yaldabaoth finally shifted as he recovered from Kohryu's initial attack, his cold, emotionless drone seeping into the air around them.

"Oh?" Mephisto scowled at one of Yaldabaoth's vast wings taking over half the sky over this region. Waterfalls of red streamed from the wing to drown the fake version of his school grounds in red, "Is he finally going to stop hiding behind his Shadows?"

The canisters on Yaldabaoth's body began to glow, and his arms brought out four divine weapons; A gun, a sword, a golden book, and a bell.

"The Seven Deadly Sins..." Noir's glove creaked as she tightly grasped the hilt of her bardiche, glaring at the spires of bone rising through the crimson ankle-deep water, "We must hurry."

"I will go to the Trickster, so don't hold back, little Empress." Beelzebub cackled as he patted Noir's head, slightly displacing her hat. "I can feel it now. Simmering within Satanael is the power needed to kill this foolish pretender for good. We need only hold out a little longer."

Mephisto feared for his brother-that-wasn't-his-brother, but Noir smiled in a calm, warm demeanor. She shifted her deadly weapon before walking forward, ripples of her colorful footsteps mixing in the crimson pools. Mephisto's eyes were wide as Beelzebub gave him a smug flick of his wing, and then he disappeared into blue ash.

Bastard.

Satanael flew over the ivory spires jutting out from below, skeletons and rib bones crawling over the blended landscapes like wretched centipedes. An infestation of blood and bone that soured their souls.

Joker and his merry band of Personas kept pace with him on the white towers.

“Look out, he’s bringing out the Seven Deadly Sins!” Oracle warned, “A-and next wave of Shadows, coming fast, Joker! This... this reading is different, so it might be a big one!”

Yaldabaoth, with one of his free hands not holding divine weapons, pointed in the space between he and Satanael, the large halfway platform that Joker landed upon. A ball of red and black energy manifested in front of the building, growing and pulsating with power.

Joker skid to a stop with Amaterasu and the others at his side, Satanael and Kohryu at his back. Joker’s eyes narrowed as the ball split and a warped Shadow appeared in jagged shards of metal. It was much like the angelic form Metatron held before his mask was removed, but this one... felt wrong .

It was no perfect copy of Yaldabaoth before he cast them to different worlds, the six wings were all varying sizes and the perfect uniformity of the other Shadows was nowhere to be seen, its shining silvery feathers curved and shifted in all directions. A messy array of sterling silver glimmering with an undercurrent of red.

Oh, and it was nearly the same size as Satanael, the lower half of its body unseen as it rose over Joker.

“No matter who hides behind this mask-” Joker braced himself as Satanael surged forward with outstretched claws, “-We’ll defeat you and move on to your master!”

Satanael’s claws dug under the warped Shadow’s jaw line and tore its expressionless mask off. It bubbled and roiled in slimy black ichor, and the angel that clawed through the muck made Joker’s heart stop.

It was a clearly feminine form covered in layers of gold and silver feathers. A pair of wings spread out from its head, the sheen of sharp feathers dotted with sparkling jewels like a glorious crown. It's first pair of arms were held in a prayer position at its chest, while the other pair- the right arm being normal- the left was an abomination of feathers, scales, jewels, and a pair of snarling faces lined with fangs. The left arm curled down and under its legs, the snapping jaws of the 'hand' looked more like a ravenous beast. A pair of holy swords floated close to its body, ready to attack at a moments notice.

"What is this... abomination ?" Satanael whispered, a sneer on his face as the being stared with bright jade eyes that lacked pupils.

"I am the Lord's chariot, the seraph Merkabah." Despite the feminine form, Merkabah spoke with a decidedly male voice, "You who choose chaos and free will, those whose tainted hearts and souls rebel against the Lord, be smote in his name!"

"Just another of Yaldabaoth's puppets to get in our way." Satanael growled when Merkabah charged, the dual blades at his sides swinging.

Satanael raised his own blade to block, the clang of metal resounded across all the worlds. Joker grunted at the force of the attack, and Amaterasu wrapped her arms around him to keep him from falling off the building. Satanael scowled, his other hand raised in a fist-

Zaou-Gongen added to Satanael's cry of rage when Charge lit up their bodies, and a God's Hand soared alongside Satanael's fist.

Merkabah's head snapped back, his body being flung away several hundred meters, only for him to use his wings to flip around and stabilize himself. Merkabah seethed in rage.

"You filth! Depraved worms!" Merkabah cried before his glare turned on Joker. "You! You who denied our Lord's hand of salvation, you who perished and came back from the dead, why do you continue to resist!?"

“Because-” Joker pointed at Yaldabaoth, who watched the battle from afar, “Humans don’t need to be ruled over! We’ll let the strengths of our own Hearts decide how we live!”

“Insolent...” Yaldabaoth’s voice echoed before he raised his arms, and the red sky darkened in black and silver.

“Yaldabaoth!” Satanael shouted as countless angel Shadows closed in on them, an entire army forming in seconds, “You know how resilient the Trickster’s soul is! No matter how many pawns you throw at us, it takes more than this to stop us!”

“Hahaha!! Well said!” Beelzebub appeared in the air beside Satanael, the sky buzzing with flies, “We’ll not lay down and die! No, we’ll fight with everything we have for the sake of free will!!”

Beelzebub’s Death Flies clashed with a small portion of the angels, swarming and devouring a few in a mad frenzy.

“And it’s not just the Trickster who thinks so...” Another Persona reappeared at their side, “All past Wild Cards have risen up when their time calls. No matter what god or entity decides to dethrone humanity, they will always defend what is right!”

Merkabah inhaled sharply, “The messiah... No. It is simply an impostor. It must be.”

Messiah Picaro smiled as he faced the horde of angels, a flash of a Megidolaon eradicating enough Shadows to make a small hole in the bubble. Joker smirked as other Personas rose around them in flashes of blue to combat the overwhelming force; Attis and Cybele, Futsunushi, Loa, and Hastur.

Mother Harlot laughed at Joker’s side as her ice formed tall, sharp spires on which Fafnir used to climb. The dragon’s laughter was almost contagious as he leapt from Shadow to Shadow, tearing their throats out in splashes of black before leaping to another.

“Let us handle things here, Trickster.” Futsunushi said as his swords sailed toward Merkabah, who batted them away with his own swords, “The others are closing in, as planned.”

“Satanael?” Joker said, looking up at his other self.

“It seems we have no choice.” Satanael smirked, “Let’s go-”

A magnetic power tugged through the land. Merkabah matched Satanael’s smirk as he batted the last of Futsunushi’s swords away as if they were nothing but pests.

“I release upon you the deadly sin of Lust.” Yaldabaoth’s voice drifted through the mass of angels, “The insanity of mankind shall bring forth your demise!”

The Shadows suddenly pulled away, drawn back like curtains, and Merkabah rose over Joker with his blades poised and ready. The way forward cleared- and they witnessed Yaldabaoth shoot his divine gun. The bullet hit Satanael’s chest, he, Joker, and every Persona staggered as Lust’s power crept over their bodies, freezing their limbs as if sharp brambles strangled them.

Kohryu howled when the Shadows took this advantage to swarm him.

“That... was a cheap shot!” Beelzebub snapped as he tried to swing his staff at a Cherub that got too close, but found he couldn’t move.

“Everyone, hold on!” Amaterasu forced her power through the mindscape to burn this affliction away, “It’s already fading, just a few more seconds-”

“Die.”

Merkabah was above Joker with his deadly blades, green eyes alight in zealous glee.

A lightning fast ray of light sliced the ivory building, the air boiling by rising pillars of white-hot flames.

“This is...” Satanael muttered as Merkabah lurched back, the hazy air distorting either sides of the conflict.

The Shadows hampering the Personas cried out and fled behind Merkabah, while the Personas took this chance to rally themselves behind Joker. Satanael pressed close to the building. Two halves, one of light and law, the other of chaos and free-will, paused... and in between them hovered a familiar silver figure.

“Metatron.” Merkabah huffed, “So our missing commander returns at last.”

“You!” Satanael’s eyes widened, “But how did you escape the Velvet Room?”

Metatron’s robes fluttered in the foul wind, his face etched in a scowl as his eyes cooled from the attack.

“Come to my side, Metatron.” Merkabah raised his deformed hand, “And we can return to our Lord’s side together, victorious!”

Metatron stared at him, and remained dead silent.

“I knew we should’ve killed you!” Beezlebub snapped, “I’ll do it myself!”

A prickle went up Joker’s spine as Sandalphon appeared in front of them, arm raised to block Beelzebub’s advance.

“You-!”

“Silence.” Sandalphon ordered.

Joker pursed his lips as shock rippled through the mindscape, but their attention was drawn to Metatron as he finally spoke.

“I remember now.”

Merkabah tilted his head, “... What?”

“I remember. The truth, that is. My only regret is that it took so long to come to my senses.” Metatron’s eyes simmered red as he glared at Merkabah, “I am thou, thou art I. I’m not simply a Shadow lost to the Sea of Human Souls anymore, no longer will I be a puppet to the false god who rules with an iron fist!”

Metatron’s eyes blazed red as he shot another Fire of Sinnai at Merkabah’s shocked expression. Blasts of volcanic heat flooded the battleground. Merkabah’s unholy scream was swallowed by the roaring flames, and Metatron floated on silver wings to hover before Joker.

Metatron’s silver body was rimmed in red, but not the crimson of the distorted realm of Yaldabaoth, but with the fires of rebellion that blossomed in his heart. He looked over his shoulder and smiled at Joker’s slack-jawed expressions.

“I’ll deal with Merkabah and the other Shadows here.” Metatron said, “Go and finish this once and for all.”

“Metatron...” Joker whispered, “Are you sure you should do this alone?”

“He won’t be alone, Trickster.” Sandalphon said as he went to his brother’s side.

“Well, I suppose I’ll throw in my power as well.” Cybele approached the angels. “Can’t let you boys do everything by yourself!”

“Same here.” Zaou-Gongen left Satanael’s shoulder to join them, Lakshmi too after another moment.

One by one, most of the Personas formed a wall between Satanael, Joker, and Merkabah pulling himself out of the flames. Only Amaterasu remained, hands steady on Joker's shoulder and back.

"Allow us to pierce this final hurdle to Yaldabaoth..." Kohryu whispered as Fafnir and Mother Harlot stood on his back, "You know what you need to do."

"Everyone, thank you." Joker smiled.

Their united soul trembled with power as the shadows surged yet again, Merkabah's screams of rage drowned by the elemental forces gathering around them. Kohryu shot a Celestial ray, Cybele ripped through Shadows with tornadoes while Attis burned them to cinders. Messiah Picaro and Hastur combined their Megidolaon in one blinding flash that tore them apart bit by bit.

Metatron fired his next attack with Sandalphon shooting rays of light, "Trickster, get ready!" Metatron cried.

Satanael set his palm on the building for Joker and Amaterasu to step in, his wings raising like black sails as the constant surges of magic thinned the Shadows' numbers.

"Now!" Metatron cried.

Satanael tucked Joker and Amaterasu to his chest and flapped his wings, sailing through the air at breakneck speed. Countless colors surrounded them as the magic of their other selves served as shield from Shadows, wind, ice, fire, lightning, curse, light, nuclear, and psy...

"It's my turn." Amaterasu laughed as Merkabah, charred and wounded and bleeding black tried to jump in their way with a distorted scream, deformed wings splayed.

Joker bowed his head to her. "We're counting on you."

Amaterasu gave them her best motherly smile, soft and loving, as she let herself fall from Satanael's grip. Her warm expression didn't waver as the darkness of the Shadow came over them. Instead, she raised her hand.

Joker shielded his eyes as the light and heat of the sun bloomed before Amaterasu. Any angels close to Merkabah were reduced to burnt corpses, falling into the black ocean's lapping waves under them, or crashing pathetically into the white towers, while others scattered in panic.

Amaterasu held up her other hand, an opening forming in the streams of plasma and fire, "Go!"

Satanael's wings curled around them, a black bullet flying through the center of the sun. They made it through the fiery tunnel, and Satanael turned to see it close, Amaterasu's smile unwavering.

Above, they soared the last stretch towards Yaldabaoth's head, while below the fighters gathered across the worlds crossed the bridges of bone that had grown over the sea of black, many now racing over the rising white pillars around Yaldabaoth. It didn't take long for Shadows to intercept them, but Joker had no doubt they'd make it.

"Why?" Yaldabaoth asked as Satanael stopped before the final dais, a Demon Lord size of a building facing down the False God the size of a world, "Why is it you stand before me yet again? I cast you away and brought your world to heel. As the administrator who guides the proper development of mankind, to ensure that humanity doesn't destroy itself, I order you to begone!"

"Don't make me laugh!" Joker snapped as Satanael held his palm out, "You cheated at a game you already rigged, and for what? To satisfy your own desires to rule?"

"Humanity has already proven itself incapable in your world, thus they had no choice but to be subjected to my leadership."

Yaldabaoth countered, "No, there is no world where humanity can continue without an administrator to guide them. Once I'm done with your foolish rebellion, nothing shall stop my reach from extending to the four worlds and beyond. The Salvation of mankind rests in my capable hands!"

"You've gotten even more fat and arrogant in your unjust rule."
Satanael said. "I didn't think it was possible."

"You think it'll be easy to win against these four worlds when they're united like this?" Joker spread his arms wide, "They don't need you to rule over them! No matter what you do, no matter how many times you try, we'll always stand in your way!"

Below, the battles raged on.

...

"Heaven piercing ice wall!"

"Reign over the frosted heavens, Hyorinmaru!"

"Tsugi no mai, Hakuren!"

Ice in all forms, be it a dragon, a glacier, or within heaven piercing spires, flowed together to freeze the angels in unforgiving tombs.

Todoroki exhaled a breath of mist, and turned to look at the two others, "Thanks for the assist."

Hitsuguya flicked his frosty blade, "You were the one assisting me."

Rukia rolled her eyes, then looked at Todoroki with a smile, "I'm glad to see there are other ice users. Which world are you from?"

"I control both ice and fire." Todoroki looked at the dual rings on his hands, then upwards. They stood within Yaldabaoth's shadow now, "I... became friends with Joker and Mona."

"I see." Rukia bowed her head in acknowledgement, "Captain Hitsuguya and I were aided by Oracle and Skull in more ways than one."

"Don't get distracted!" Todoroki silently groaned at his father's voice, a pillar of flame shooting past them to strike another Shadow. Endeavor landed beside Todoroki with a wide grin. "Don't you think you should use both sides, Shoto?"

"Be quiet, father." Todoroki muttered, "I was planning on it, but using ice with these two was more beneficial."

Another voice laughed, and a boy landed on another bone-white pillar close to them, pointed fangs revealed in his grin as he was covered in a layer of blue flames, "Now don't be like that! Us flame wielders gotta stick together, right?"

"Well, I don't usually control flames." Hawks descended beside Hitsuguya, who glared at him as he lifted his blade of fire, "But I hope you can make an exception?"

"Welcome to the club!" Rin's grin widened as his demonic tail bobbed back and forth, "Glad to have you on board!"

"Speak for yourself." There was a snap of fingers, and the six of them shielded their eyes as several explosions cleared the Shadows ahead. A man stood, smirking, as ashes flitted around him, "Stop wasting time and-"

"Oh, come on now. Don't be such a spoil sport!" Panther, one of the original Phantom Thieves, stepped between the ice users, "I have a new appreciation for ice!"

"And I for fire." Fox jumped onto the same pillar as Colonial Mustang, "You-"

"WOULD YOU ALL SHUT UP AND GET MOVING!?" Bakugo soared over them, scowling, "STOP YOUR STUPID POSTURING

BETWEEN ICE AND FIRE AND JUST GO !”

Hitsuguya gaped as Bakugo leapt from pillar to pillar, “Why do I get the feeling he and Kurosaki would get along?”

“Because we would!” Another shinigami soared in Bakugo’s wake, bearing a long black sword and a strange mask on his face. “You’re all falling behind!”

“Only you, Ichigo...” Rukia pinched the bridge of her nose, “They’re right.” She looked around, “Whether we use ice or fire, we have a job to do. We need to work together!”

“Let’s go!” Panther cheered.

Hitsuguya was the first to shoot off on draconic wings of ice, Hawks following on feathered wings of fire seconds later. Rukia jumped over to the next pillars with quick flashes of Shunpo.

Todoroki rolled his eyes and jumped after her, using the combined ice bridge as a platform. Endeavor and the boy with the blue flaming sword chased after them. Fox and Panther exchanged amused glances before they set off, too.

Colonel Mustang grimaced, his spirits soured. He muttered something about children stealing his thunder, and no longer being useless in this bloody rain, before he raced forward to fight god.

...

Gunshots popped from two figures standing back to back, each bang piercing through Angels.

“Not bad.” One reloaded their gun while the other covered her, “What’s your name?”

“Okumura Yukio.” Despite their hellish surroundings and the Angels falling under them, the pair remained calm and collected, “I’m from the world where Panther and Noir were exiled.”

“Riza Hawkeye, from the world where Fox and Queen fell to.” She aimed and fired, another Angel lurched, black blood spewing from its head as it fell over the side of the pillar, “Pleased to make your acquaintance.”

Yukio adjusted his glasses, his gun smoking, “Likewise.”

They tensed when another wave of Angels surrounded them in a whirlwind of gold masks and fluttering wings. Their guns clicked and they aimed, when several bullets curved through the air to strike down many Angels at once.

“Yeehaw!!” Snipe flipped his guns around his fingers as he jumped to the pillar, “Am I glad there are more gun enthusiasts from the other worlds! Howdy, my hero name is Snipe and-”

A shower of bright blue arrows came from behind them, eradicating the rest of the Shadows Snipe missed.

“Guns aren’t everything.” Another appeared beside them in a blur of motion, similar, yet different to how the shinigami did it. He had blue hair and sharp features hidden behind glasses, and in his hands he held a glowing bow of energy.

“Neat!” Snipe grinned under his mask, “How did you even do that with nuclear magic? You don’t have one of Joker’s weapons!”

“It’s simple.” The boy turned away, his free hand grasping the dragon horn on his belt, “I infused the strange reiatsu from this horn into my bow and arrows, and shoot... ‘nuclear magic’, as you called it.”

Snipe whistled. “What’s your name?”

“Just called me Ishida. My first name doesn’t matter.”

"Stay alert." Riza reloaded her gun, "There are more battles around us, and we can't get careless."

"Agreed." Yukio said as he checked over his guns.

The four of them whirled around to a nearby pillar when it exploded, a cloud of dust, bits of Shadows, and shrapnel falling into the sea of black ichor below.

A figure walked out of the smoke cloud, giggling as she held a grenade launcher like it was her precious child.

"Please be more careful..." Queen said as she emerged with Noir, their Personas right behind them, "That was a close one."

"But did you see the looks on their faces before that grenade exploded?" Noir stated with a cheery tone, "Let's find more!"

Queen facepalmed, and then Anat cleared her voice when it noticed their audience.

"Oh! Hi there!" Noir beamed and waved at them, ignoring how her prim Phantom Thief attire was splattered in bits of black, "Is everyone having as much fun as I am?"

Snipe gulped, "Uh... sure, kiddo."

Yukio sighed and bore the same expression as Queen, "As long as you keep that energy focused on the Shadows, Noir..."

"Of course!" Noir looked up at Yaldabaoth's great body looming over them. They were so close now, "I'm saving the best for last!"

With that, she and her Persona climbed to the taller pillars, walking over the skeletons born from Yaldabaoth's power infesting the area with its greatest strength.

"I'm not going to bother asking if that girl was sane." Ishida muttered.

"It's better to just go along with it." Snipe huffed as he peered up at Joker and Satanael, "You get used to it, after a while. I'm sure as hell going to miss it when it's all over."

Riza snorted, a warm smile softening her face as she watched Queen catch up with Noir, "Yeah. Same here."

"Welp," Snipe stretched as he walked to the edge of this pillar, "Let's go help the kiddos save our worlds. No biggie, right?"

Riza stopped next to him, expression stern, with Yukio following suit.

Ishida adjusted his glasses, "Just don't slow me down."

Snipe balked as Ishida disappeared in a rush of wind, "Hey! That's cheating!"

Yukio Okumura and Riza Hawkeye exchanged weary glances as the other two raced ahead, bullets and nuclear-infused arrows firing by the dozen at the relentless Shadows.

Then they, too, continued their journey towards the Malevolent God, standing side by side by people from worlds different to theirs, yet they were all kindred souls who truly savored the art of gunplay and archery.

...

"Take that, you damned pests!!"

"Merp!"

"Yeah, you tell them, Lady Stubbs!"

Spinner cackled as his trusty scimitar spun, black blood spewing wherever it swung. For now, they found themselves alone, separated by the dozens of other battles happening on pale towers all around them, but that didn't stop them from charging forward once these pesky angels were slain.

"FOR JOKER!!" Spinner screamed at the top of his lungs as he jumped to the next pillar via a strange bony bridge. He was running too fast to see it move until it was too late.

"MERP!"

"What the!?"

The bony spine undulated, and Spinner screamed as he held onto the spike jutting out of it for dear life.

"Oi, what the hell do you think you're doing on Zabimaru!?" An unfamiliar voice called.

Spinner looked to another pale tower as the moving spine circled it, looking to the tail bone in the red-haired man's grasp, and the large snake head hovering above him. He recognized the giant suit of armor nearby as Alphonse.

"Er, catching a ride I guess?" Spinner said. "What are you guys doing?"

"We were fighting Shadows together, and were about to move on." Alphonse looked between Renji and Spinner, eyes finally landing on Lady Stubbs, "Do you want to join us?"

"I don't see why not!" Spinner beamed, "The more the merrier! And hey, we can use this cool looking snake to go faster, right?"

"Merp!"

Renji rolled his eyes and groaned, "Fine. Fine! Just shut up and hang on!"

"What-"

Spinner squawked as Renji hopped on the bony serpent's head, and Alphonse was smart enough to copy him.

Renji waved the hand with the serpent's tail in his grasp, and the giant bony snake flew off with a loud hiss.

Spinner would deny that he screamed all the way into the next battle, but Lady Stubbs would always keep the truth close to her heart.

...

"Are you sure our classmates are safe?" lida asked.

"Positive." Yaoyorozu put a hand on her temple. The white tower they stood on was slightly higher than the surrounding ones, so they got a good view of the area, "According to Nezu, most of them are grouped with others. Nobody is alone, I think."

"Don't sweat it so much." Tensei put a hand on his brother's shoulder, "You're with me and Best Jeanist! What could go wrong?"

Best Jeanist face-palmed, "Tensei, you should know better than to say something like that."

As if to prove their point, the world trembled and the sky above them darkened as Shadow rained upon them.

"See what I mean." Best Jeanist said as he readied his battle stance.

"It's not like I jinxed it!" Tensei called.

"It's a small group, so as long as we work together we'll be fine!" Yaoyorozu stated.

"She's right!" lida Tenya chopped his arm, "So let's defeat this group and move on already! Joker is counting on us!"

Tensei and Best Jeanist exchanged glances, with the former laughing, "You're right, little brother. Let's do this!"

...

Miruko cackled when the Shadow dissipated under her punch with a scream, but she didn't stop to watch the body disappear as she rounded on another.

"Not bad!" Yoruichi performed an axe kick on another in the swarm, her entire body wreathed in gold lightning from Ishtar's horn. The lightning from her attack snapped around the Shadow and silenced its cry, "How many does that make, now?"

Miruko huffed as the next Shadow fell before them, wiping her brow, "Dunno. I kinda lost count after fifty!"

"Only fifty?" Yoruichi laughed, bright and loud, "Those are rookie numbers! Kisuke would never let me live it down if he got more than me!"

Miruko rolled around shoulders, "Then we better pick up the pace! I'd never hear the end of it from Hawks if he beat more Shadows than me, too!"

"I think I like you." Yoruichi smirked, "Let's show them what we're made of!"

"Hell yeah!"

The pair jumped back when something impacted the tower they stood upon, directly under the shadow of one of Yaldabaoth's wings.

"I've heard your words and honor the companionship between different worlds!" A mountain of muscle stood from the wreckage, shirtless and flexing his bulging muscles. Miruko and Yoruichi stared as sparkles radiated off of him, "As these Shadows try to pass judgement upon us, so too do we pass judgement on them for being agents of a false god! Allow me, Alex Louis Armstrong, the strong arm alchemist, to assist you in your contest! Behold the techniques passed down through the Armstrong line for generations-"

"Oh my god, it's All Might 2.0!" Miruko blurted.

Armstrong paused, one of his sparkles falling into the abyss from shock, when there was a groan coming from the next pillar over.

"At least your All Might isn't a chatterbox, right?" Skull muttered as he hopped over, scowling.

"Skull!" Yoruichi beamed. She vanished in a flash of Shunpo and appeared behind him, ruffling his hair, "Weren't you with Kisuke?"

Skull sputtered as he tried to shake off her hand, "The last time I saw him, he was still at the base of the towers. But all these fights kinda separated everyone so I lost track."

Yoruichi hummed.

Armstrong cleared his throat and stood tall, eyes focused on Miruko, "Who is this All Might?"

Yoruichi turned her head just as there was a startled cough nearby. Another group had made it to their pillar, having climbed up a bone bridge to do so.

Nighteye, standing behind Yagi with Tsukauchi, adjusted his glasses, "Tell me that was a joke."

"I mean..." Tsukauchi squinted at Armstrong, "I can kind've see where Miruko's coming from."

"Tsukauchi!" Yagi said.

Armstrong puffed out his chest and approached them, the sparkles reigniting with a passion, "Are one of you All Might?"

"That... would be me." Yagi stepped forward, Mjolnir loose in his grasp, "And although I can't really hold that form anymore..."

Miruko hid her smirk behind her hand as All Might puffed up to his muscular form. Skull's eyes nearly bugged out as the man deflated a whole two seconds later, hand waving to dispel the steam.

"Hmm, what a marvelous power!" Armstrong said jovially, "But why can't you hold that form for longer?"

"Well, there was an, ah... injury." Yagi put a hand to his side, and then looked up to Satanael, "One Joker was kind enough to heal, but that power has mostly faded from my body despite it."

The trio stilled when tears lined Armstrong's face, and he held out a meaty hand to Yagi, "Still, it is a pleasure to meet you! Be it a past glory or not, I am glad to have met another perfect physical specimen!"

"Er, you too?" Yagi said as he took Armstrong's hand and shook.

"One of yours?" Miruko whispered to Yoruichi.

"Nope!"

Skull sighed and ran a hand through his hair, "He's friends with Queen and Fox, apparently. And when we met up and I told him who I was, he started cryin' and then he hugged me! What a weird dude..."

Miruko snorted.

A bang resounded overhead.

"Meet and greet time is over." Yoruichi's expression hardened as Yaldabaoth's metallic cry echoed through the false world, and

*Satanael dropped to dodge the god's bullets and shards of light,
"Just a bit more and we'll be right there! Then, the real fight starts."*

"Hang in there, Leader!" Skull shouted as he threw himself forward.

*Miruko and Yoruichi exchanged grins before they followed,
Armstrong, Yagi, and the others not far behind.*

The wind rushed in Joker's ears as they spun in a dizzying swirl, Yaldabaoth's bullets and arrows of light following their frantic path through the sky. Red rain pattered on Satanael's wings as he flared them to slow their trajectory, he aimed his weapon and fired.

Bolts of golden lightning rained down from the sky, the Riot Gun striking true.

But unlike the fully charged Celestial Ray, Yaldabaoth showed no signs of damage, save for the slight twitch in the arms holding his divine weapons.

"Desist this futile resistance!" Yaldabaoth ordered as he raised the arm holding the massive golden sword, "Or face the Wrath of God!"

Satanael huffed, "Throw anything you want at us, you damned chalice. We'll return it ten-fold!"

Yaldabaoth's laughter sent chills down Joker's spine.

"Very well." Yaldabaoth's wings stretched, "For the sin of rebelling against me, I release upon the world the deadly sin of Wrath! You have no means of escape, humans!"

The blade fell, as precise and practiced as the swing of an executioner's, and yet...

They stared at their own warped reflection in the gold when it sailed past them, striking the border of Karakura and True Cross like a meteor. A wave of destruction spread out from the crater, flattening trees and buildings alike until there was nothing left. The small mountains in Karakura were ripped asunder, and the burnt corpses of the trees spread fire and death in all directions.

Creaks of metal reached their ears as Yaldabaoth pulled back the sword, "The Passion of mankind shall bring forth ruin..."

"That... that wasn't... ! Didn't he use the book for Wrath last time!?"

"Oracle...?" Joker whispered, breathless. "Was there anyone...?"

"No! Um... M-most people are moving along the pillars now, but that damage... It can't happen again!"

"Friendly signatures are honing in on Yaldabaoth, fast!" La Brava said, "Keep him busy for just a little longer!"

"Well?" Yaldabaoth said, "Which sin should I release next, Trickster ? Vanity?" The cursed bell rang, the vibrations ringing deep in their skulls, "Or perhaps Pride?" He raised the hand holding the book, snapping it closed to prepare for any sort of counter attack, "The choice is yours! Which facsimile of these worlds shall meet its end next?"

"The answer is obvious." Joker said when his fear faded, and he smirked at Yaldabaoth, "None. Do you know why?"

If Yaldabaoth had a real face, they imagined it would fall into a scowl by the dark scoff the god gave off.

"Because these worlds aren't just the places they're supposed to represent. It's not the concrete cities or verdant forests, nor the man-made lakes or streams, that matter." Joker held out his arms, "No, it's the people who live there. As long as their hearts beat as one, as long as they stand together to face any adversity, to support each other and rebuild together, then there's no way you'll be able to destroy them."

“Hmph. How foolish.” Yaldabaoth muttered, “Very well, then I shall make that choice for you. For rebelling against me, I release upon the world the deadly sin of Gluttony! You have no means of escape-”

“Gods, do you ever shut up!?” Elizabeth called.

Yaldabaoth was consumed in an expanse of white, and his cry of rage rained down across the combined worlds when it dissipated.

Elizabeth, carried by Asura, floated nearby. At her side were the rest of the Attendants, Margaret floating gracefully with her Compendium open and ready, Lavenza seated upon Vishnu’s shoulder, and Theodore balanced perfectly in Lucifer’s palm.

A form landed on Satanael’s shoulder in a burst of wind, “Joker!” Mona called as Mercurius landed by his other self, “The cavalry has arrived!”

Voices of courage raged, and all manner of forms jumped onto the last pillar before Yaldabaoth.

...

Nezu cackled as he floated within Prometheus with Oracle and La Brava, several dozen screens around them as they flew through the air. One such screen revealed how Metatron’s final Fire of Sinnai bisected Merkabah, either halves of his body falling to the black sea below.

With their former commander turned traitor, and with Merkabah dead, the remaining Shadows scattered.

Oracle cheered as her Leader’s remaining Personas eliminated most Shadow before they even had a chance to back up Yaldabaoth.

“You got this, Joker!” La Brava cried with all of her soul.

Oracle cracked her knuckles and typed on several keyboards, and Nezu's eyes lit up when the code finished and a holographic button appeared before the three of them.

"On my signal, press your buttons!" Oracle stated, "... Now!"

They slammed their hands, or in Nezu's case, a paw, on their buttons.

"Only a little further." Nezu said as he watched the myriad of lights spread around their comrade in arms' bodies, "You can do this, Joker!"

"We believe in you!" La Brava raised her fists to the air, "So don't lose to that thing!"

Oracle grinned as she sensed their emotions empowering her Leader's final attack.

...

"Aniki!" Kirishima yelled as another Angel fell before his fist, "I know you can win! You're the manliest person I've ever met, so I know there's no way you could ever lose against him!"

"DAMN STRAIGHT, JOKER!!" Bakugo howled, "SO KILL THAT THING AND GET YOUR SORRY ASS HOME ALREADY!"

...

Midoriya panted as he landed on Ryukyu's back, being steadied by Gang Orca's massive hand.

Ryukyu roared a battle cry as the Malevolent God was being hounded by so many attacks, his frustration rising in the divine instruments on his multiple arms.

"Hang in there, Joker!" Ryukyu called as she dove for the arm bearing the bell.

"On my signal, Midoriya?" Gang Orca asked as he clutched a massive bardiche in one hand.

Midoriya, exhausted and slightly injured, beamed, "Yeah! We have to support Joker with everything we've got!"

Gang Orca laughed, "Let's do this!"

Ryukyu collided with the metallic arm, claws scratching and jaws ripping.

"There!" Gang Orca pointed to the exposed joint below as Yaldabaoth tried to shake them off, "A united attack between us both should do it."

"Got it!"

Midoriya leapt with green lightning sparking around his body while Gang Orca dropped. Their combined attacks, a hearty swing of a bardiche and a super-powered kick, severed the bent metal.

Ryukyu cried in victory as the arm was torn off and thrown down below, the accursed bell going with it. But then there was nothing stopping them from falling, too. Ryukyu snarled as she dove to catch them, when another acted on her behalf.

"Santen Kisshun, I reject!"

A yellow shield caught them and lowered them onto a nearby pillar, and Ryukyu landed behind them, breathing hard.

"Are you two okay!?" She asked.

"F-fine! But who...?" Midoriya asked.

Gentle Criminal landed behind them with Mr. Compress at his side, and another girl they didn't recognize. She had long orange hair and a kind expression, the trio of arrows forming the shield returned to her and formed petals on her blue hairpins.

"We met this little lady earlier." Mr. Compress chuckled at their flabbergasted expressions.

"Do any of you need healing?" The girl asked.

Midoriya turned red, but frantically shook his head, "N-No!"

Gang Orca opened his mouth, but they were silenced when the world trembled again. They looked over to see Skull and Fox had joined the furious battle at the main tower in front of Yaldabaoth, ice and lightning dancing alongside the other wild magic.

"Well, well..." Mr. Compress walked forward, "Let's give Joker the power he needs to end this once and for all!"

"He's right, of course." Gentle Criminal smiled up at Satanael, warm and sad at once, "You have this in the bag Joker, of that I'm sure."

Ryukyu chuckled, "Then let's not keep him waiting!"

"Right!" Midoriya called.

"You go on ahead," The orange haired girl bowed to them, "I'll catch up!"

Ryukyu nodded to her, and the group charged into battle in Joker's name.

...

Hitoshi rolled under the Shadow's swipe, one of the only Angels who reached their twisted master on the last pale tower. Unfortunately for it, it was vastly outnumbered.

Aizawa's capture weapon snaked around its body to stop its movements, and Hitoshi threw himself to his feet and jumped at it, his white and black dagger slicing through it like butter.

He wiped his brow as the Shadow vanished, staring up at Joker who stood defiant and confident in Satanael's palm.

He felt in his heart that his Arcana fueled his best friend, his brother, and glancing at Aizawa, he knew the other man felt the same. With mutual nods, they turned towards the God Of Control and added their battle cries to the horde of attacks.

...

"How pathetic." Fox glowered at Yaldabaoth as ice crept up the God's body. "To think you were strong enough to catch us off guard last time, but your strength falters before us!"

"Agreed!" Noir waved an arm, and the ice was shattered by her One Shot Kill. One of the wings snapped, sending a shower of broken silver feathers upon them, "But don't think we'll go easy on you!"

"Yeah!" Panther cried as her whip snapped, "We'll return every ounce of pain you caused for us... every. Single. Bit!"

"How to it feel to be so helpless?" Queen whispered as Yaldabaoth tried to retaliate with bullets, blades, and magic, "For hurting us and our Leader so much... you deserve to be taken down."

"Hell yeah, Queen!" Skull beamed, "Everyone, let's show him who's boss!"

...

Mona snickered at their comrades' words, "This is it, Joker! Are you ready?"

Joker looked into Satanael's eyes, and then they both glanced to the gun-sword in Satanael's other hand. The pulse within the chamber was at its peak.

"Yes. Let's do this."

Mona leapt off in a gust of wind alongside Mercurius to join the other original Phantom Thieves at the head of the battle below.

"We'll cover you as best as we are able." Margaret stated.

"Just hurry up and kill him already." Elizabeth smirked, "We're all waiting!"

Theodore smiled, "It'll be a grand finale for certain."

"I was right to never waver my faith in you." Lavenza's eyes turned warm, "One more push is all it takes. My siblings and I will combine our attacks to give you an opening. Don't waste it."

Joker chuckled, "Well, Satanael?"

Satanael raised his gun-sword, the Sinful Shell loaded, "It's time."

The Attendants' powers threaded together, and Theodore took the lead by raising his hand towards Yaldabaoth.

A star appeared over the Malevolent God, flickered, then rained down a searing pillar of light. The Morning Star collided with Yaldabaoth, the sky splitting at the deep metal reverberation and the crackle of power from the explosion. The other Attendants smiled as they combined their powers and cast Megidolaon in tune with it.

The other fighters never stopped their assault from below, and Joker pushed his shock aside as the Attendants' attack caused Yaldabaoth to stagger, another one of his arms splitting off. It landed in Amestris, crushing a vast majority of it, the book tumbling from its grasp to reduce another few buildings to dust.

"Now!" Joker called.

Satanael flared his wings and hurried forward. The power coalesced in Satanael's weapon, his finger steady upon the trigger as Yaldabaoth raised his head. His metal skin was marred and burned, dented and cracked from the united army unleashing their rage upon him. Feathers from his wings were missing, and black blood leaked from every wound to stain his silvery skin like oil.

Yaldabaoth snarled as Satanael raised his gun, staring straight down the barrel.

"You... it's you . It's always been you. You were the one to gather this pitiful rebellion, so I only need to eradicate you and crush these whelps!" Blackness pulsed between Yaldabaoth's damaged limbs. "For the sin of rebelling against me, I banish you to the darkest pits of the abyss! No world shall ever shelter you again as you perish in agony!"

Unbeknownst to Joker and Satanael, within the last few seconds of the battle, Yaldabaoth froze as the power to access other dimensions was suddenly ripped from his grasp.

Other beings had appeared in the fabric between this false world and the abyss, each at a pivotal point of the realm like the arrows of a compass. They'd waited for this exact moment.

A red-haired man who bestowed power upon his people, who now pretended to be a human. The one who gathered them together.

A flicker of the purest blue flame.

The smirk from a being of light and shadow, the Truth of all things.

And a small, sentient gem, taking the place of the King of Souls to grant a deeply desired wish.

Yaldabaoth hesitated.

And it was that single second of pause...

That. Cost. Him. Everything.

“Pillage him, Satanael!”

Everything stilled as Yaldabaoth gazed at the boy who held the Universe in his eyes.

BANG!

All Yaldabaoth knew was pain and the sound of a shattering mirror.

```
{ "prefetch": [ { "source": "list", "urls":
["/works/23989186/chapters/132847972#workskin"] } ] }
```

With The Stars And Us

Chapter 99: With The Stars And Us

The bond that we have

Forever strong

I am a friend you can count on

Never forget when we're apart

We are as one, under the stars

It's okay

For us

To say...

Goodbye.

Merry Christmas and Happy Holidays everyone!!

Here's the song choice for this chapter :')

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=fobU-VheouA&ab_channel=Sapphire

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

Streams of sunlight glimmered off the fractured fractals in a veil of beautiful colors., and Joker could do nothing but stare at the gaping hole in Yaldabaoth's head.

All fighting below ceased, stopped on a dime as Yaldabaoth spoke in a broken voice.

"So even after all of this... Damn that Igor, damn that lying Nyarl-" Yaldabaoth's laughter was dry and mirthless as flakes of gold peeled off his body and fluttered in the wind, "The true power of the Trickster remains unmatched after all..."

The bone spikes and twisting towers of spines dissipated, and the remaining angelic Shadows evaporated under the blue sky without so much as a whisper. The great sea of black under Yaldabaoth, and the puddles of red, faded into crystal clear waters. Gold glitter showered Joker as Yaldabaoth's body disappeared, leaving behind a tiny chalice in his place.

Satanael followed the chalice's descent down to the large dais where most of the combatants waited. He let Joker hop down first before blue flames consumed his body, returning him to his smaller size. He hovered beside his other self as they approached the chalice.

Joker felt something within himself unravel after so long. Peace, perhaps. Or the feeling of sure victory after a long fought war. He looked to the heavens and closed his eyes, taking a deep breath of the fresh air.

"Joker."

Joker opened his eyes and looked at Satanael, at the other Personas as they gathered around him and the chalice. Metatron was there too, lingering in the back with Sandalphon, eyes focused on Joker.

Satanael reached his hand down.

“I know.” Joker forced himself to smile and he placed his hand in Satanael’s, their fingers tightening over their wrists.

Satanael chuckled, warm and proud, “We’ll always be with you, deep within your soul.”

Blue cinders mixed with the gold.

Kohryu was the first to go by deeply bowing his head. Fafnir and Mother Harlot followed. Messiah Picaro and Zaou-Gongen. Hastur, Beelzebub, Loa, Futsunushi. Each one that disappeared added more blue to the gold, gently swirling around Joker with a soft breeze.

Cybele threw an arm around Attis as they vanished together.

Lakshmi’s smile softened before she went, too, tugging Odin with her.

Amaterasu hugged Joker and placed a kiss on his temple before delving back into his soul.

Sandalphon simply nodded, his satisfaction known as he and Metatron vanished.

Joker looked deep into Satanael’s eyes as he was the last remaining. His other self smiled, tightened his grip over Joker’s hand, and then slowly faded away. The cerulean ash sprinkled over Joker when his hand suddenly felt empty and cold.

Joker placed his hand over his heart as every Persona curled together within his soul, each falling into a deep slumber.

Their duty was done, at least.

Joker would never deny them their much-needed retirement.

“It’s... it’s really over...”

Joker looked to the other Phantom Thieves when they approached, smiling sadly at Noir, “Yes, it is.”

Skull took a deep breath, “HELL YEAAAH!!!” He screamed to the false world, tears in his eyes.

Panther put a hand on her chest, eyes watering, too, “I can’t believe we’re standing here, right now.”

Fox looked to the sky where Yaldabaoth hovered previously, “Something so malevolent turning into something beautiful...”

Queen held up her hands as the gold and blue starlight continued to fall, “What happens now that Yaldabaoth is gone?”

Mona put his paw on the chalice, eyes closing, “The next step is to go home, but...”

“About that...” Oracle fidgeted with her goggles, “Urahara and I set this place to start fading after Yaldabaoth was defeated, so...”

Urahara appeared several meters behind her in a flick of Shunpo, frowning. He glanced at Oracle and Skull before he looked down, his hat shading his eyes, “The edges of this world are already unraveling with Yaldabaoth’s defeat. Say your final goodbyes because everyone will be returned to their rightful worlds within the next minute or so.”

One minute .

“That’s it?” Mona whispered in shock.

“It’s better this way.” Urahara stated, “Trust me.”

“What about their status?” Joker asked, “Does anyone need to be... revived?”

Urahara’s smile softened, “A few injuries all around, but no deaths. People are already healing their injuries with your gifts while they can.”

“Good.” Joker smiled when the others stared after him. “Go.”

Skull and Oracle grasped each others hands as they went off with Urahara.

Queen and Fox located the area where their allies were, Panther and Noir did the same.

Mona looked up at his partner, “Shall we?”

“We shall.” Joker grabbed the chalice, surprised at how warm it was, before Mona hopped on his shoulder.

The other heroes and students weren’t far. Like the other worlds’ inhabitants, they split away from the mishmashed teams and gathered with the others who belonged to their individual worlds.

Joker and Mona saw a flicker of movement in the corner of their eye.

Mr. Compress, La Brava, Gentle Criminal, Spinner and Lady Stubbs stood at the edge of a separate white pillar. Mr. Compress tipped his hat before they jumped off the side without another word.

Mona and Joker shared a mutual nod.

They had said their goodbyes that day in the Velvet Room, and Mr. Compress and the others would need the head start to leave U.A.’s confines while they had the chance.

“So...” Nezu stood at the head of the group when Joker and Mona finally made it, paws tightly tangled together, “This is it.”

“Yeah.” Joker gestured with the sparkling chalice in his hand, “So much trouble, for something so small, huh?”

Hitoshi startled with a wet laugh, “Everything was worth it.”

“IT REALLY WAS!!” Kirishima burst into tears.

“Oi, stop crying all over the place!” Bakugo snapped, even when it was obvious that the boy’s own eyes were wet and shining, too.

“Hey, kid,” Hawks smirked as he put a firm hand on Joker’s shoulder, “Take care of yourself, yeah?”

“We will.”

“I’ll make sure of it!” Mona said with a bright smirk.

Aizawa scoffed, “Good luck. All of us will need every wink of sleep we can get after this.”

“That’s more like it!” Midnight cackled, “All it took for you to get some real sleep was fighting a god? Who knew!”

“Maybe fighting god is something we need to do more often?” Present Mic said.

“Hell yeah!” Miruko pumped her fist in the air, “This was fun as hell!”

Ryukyu and Gang Orca traded looks of horror.

“Let’s not make this a normal habit, yes?” Best Jeanist stated.

Their banter halted when they all felt it. A sharp, deep seated tug, like a string trying to pull them all away.

Joker looked out to the meshed landscapes, his stomach dropping when the edge of the worlds disappeared, the wave of nothingness slowly growing closer to their tower. Multicolored specs of light joined with the gold and blue swirling through the air. Like all the stars in the sky dancing around them.

“Everyone…” Joker turned to the group, but his throat closed.

“Y-you don’t need to say it!” Midoriya gave them a bright and happy grin, despite the tears rolling down his cheeks, “We understand!”

“I agree!” Iida Tenya sniffled as he puffed out his chest and chopped his arm rapidly. “It... it was an honor to get to know you!”

If his hand was more than a bit shaky, nobody dared to point it out.

“We’ll take care of everything, right?” Tensei called as he looked around.

“Yes!”

“We’ll do our best!”

“Damn right we will!”

“Nobody showed us how to give our all better than you, Joker... Ren.” Yagi beamed at them, “I don’t think we’ll ever forget those lessons. Right, Nighteye?”

“Right...” Nighteye huffed as he adjusted his glasses, brow strangely furrowed, “Farewell, Joker and Mona.”

Yagi grinned as he elbowed his old sidekick.

The chalice in Joker’s hands suddenly shone bright, blinding them. The innate, inner tug within them was harsher, stronger, and Joker and Mona felt themselves being pulled away by some unknown force. By the time the brightness died down, panic had stricken the faces of the students and heroes as the white light began to separate them. The finer details of the lands below were consumed by the pale void.

“W-wait. I-I’m not ready!” Hitoshi reached his hand out, voice cracking, “Joker!!”

Joker simply smiled as the distance between them grew larger. Other voices joined in, not just by Aizawa, or Yaoyorozu, or even Todoroki, but by the other worlds as Joker and Mona drifted close to their original teammates.

“Goodbye, everyone!” Noir shouted as she waved, “Goodbye!”

“Take care!” Panther called, her hands situated around her mouth to project her voice, “And Rin, don’t you dare slack off on your training, mister!”

“None of you die to any lame Hollows, you hear me?!” Skull bore a large grin.

Oracle was trembling as she sniffled, “I would be so disappointed after all the crap we’ve been through!”

“It has been... an adventure.” Fox bowed, “Farewell.”

“Everyone, take care!” Queen called with a small wave, “Please, stay safe!!”

Joker strained his ears as the voices from the other worlds faded and dulled into a murmur, which then wilted into silence. Their world was consumed by white, and Joker shielded his face when there was a thrum of power within his whole body, the other Phantom Thieves crying in shock at the intensity of it.

Ren kept his eyes clenched shut as an odd sensation made his head swim and a pit to fall in his stomach, the same dropping feeling anyone would get from looking down at a great height.

The sound of footsteps.

Car horns and the smell of exhaust.

Ren slowly peeled one eye open, then the other. Four sparkling blue butterflies pranced around him before going off in their own direction, but it was the surrounding scenery that made him cry out.

“You guys!”

The others followed his example- maskless, in normal winter clothes- to take in their surroundings.

Futaba gasped, "This... this is... !"

"The Shibuya Crossing..." Makoto's eyes were wide.

"We..." Ryuji cleared his throat when his voice strained, "We're really back?"

Ann whipped out her phone, rapidly scrolling, "The MetaNav is gone!"

"Um... excuse me!" Haru reached out to the closest salaryman, who gave them a narrow eyed look.

"Yes?"

"If you don't mind me asking... what day is it?"

"It's Christmas Day."

"And what about the Red Rain!?" Ryuji blurted, "Do you remember anything about Yaldabaoth or his Shadows!?"

"Ryuji!" Makoto snapped.

"I... have no idea what you're talking about young man. Are you sure you're okay?"

"We are!" Haru put on her best smile, "Thank you."

The salaryman examined them one last time before he shrugged and walked away.

Yusuke knelt down and ran his hands over the cold pavement, ignoring the odd stare or two from the passing civilians, "Yes, we're finally back."

Ann released a shaky sigh, her fists trembling, "We're... we're really home!"

“And it looks like time wasn’t affected by Yaldabaoth’s reign, either...” Makoto whispered in thought.

“Wait!” Haru interlaced her hands and looked around in a panic, “Where’s Mona-chan!?”

“Mona?” Ren looked around, as did the others, when he felt movement on his shoulder. “Mona!”

Ren looked back to see his school bag hanging on his shoulder, wriggling and moving as if something were trying to escape. He chuckled, and the others watched as he moved the bag to his chest and opened the zipper.

Morgana took a dramatic breath as he popped his head and upper body out, “I couldn’t breathe with all the stuff in there!! Oh hey, we’re back in Tokyo!?”

“Mona-chan!” Haru jumped forward and ran her hands over his head, “Don’t scare us like that!”

“For real, dude...” Ryuji muttered as he rubbed the back of his head, “I dunno what I’d do if we lost you in that mess.”

Morgana rolled his eyes, “I’m fine! More importantly, look!”

Everyone looked in Ren’s bag, curious.

“There’s a tiny golden cup in here. That must be what remains of Yaldabaoth.” Morgana said as he nudged the gaudy looking thing at the top of the pile, “But everything else is here, too! I was careful not to crinkle Eri’s picture, o-or Midoriya’s notebook. Or... any of the other stuff.”

Ren dug around, relieved that every gift from his confidants was accounted for, but he felt nothing from the small golden cup. In fact, it was so small it easily fit in the palm of his hand. That it was powerless and minuscule was as funny as it was relieving.

“Ren... Everyone... Now that we’re all together,” Futaba straightened as everyone’s eyes fell on her. “There’s... there’s one place we should all go! Right now!”

Ren grinned, “Yeah.”

“Well, what are we waiting for!?” Ann stated.

“I would be down for some curry.” Yusuke said with a fond smile.
“Fighting a God sure works up an appetite.”

Haru beamed, “Boss’ coffee sounds delicious!”

“Last one there’s a rotten egg!!” Futaba yelled before she dashed off towards the subway tunnels.

“Hey! No fair!!” Ryuji sputtered.

“Please, no running!” Makoto called as she jogged after Futaba, “It could be slippery!”

“Come on, slowpokes!” Ann grabbed Ryuji and Yusuke’s wrist and raced forward, the both of them squawking in surprise.

“Well?” Morgana grinned, sharp and playful, at Ren, “We can ‘t let them beat us!”

Ren burst with laughter as he took off running after them. Normal civilians jumped out of the way of the racing band of teenagers, scowling or rolling their eyes. Complaining under their breaths. But nobody seemed to remember Yaldabaoth’s reign. There were no bony protrusions from the ground or around the buildings, nor any signs of red .

The puddle Ren splashed through before all but leaping down the stairs was clear.

No Shadows rose before them in a challenge, leaving nothing to stop them from all piling into the train. Each Phantom Thief bore a warm, soft grin as they fidgeted in excitement. The train ride passed with a sense of being too slow and too fast at the same time, and Ren bellowed with more laughter as he was the first one off the train.

Morgana wheezed in amusement as the others clambered behind them.

Through the station.

Up the stairs.

Down an achingly familiar street.

The first steps into Yongen.

His heart pounded when they came across all the familiar stores and houses-

Ren wasted no time bursting through Leblanc's doors, the jingling bell ringing overhead was something out of a long-forgotten dream. He panted for breath with his hands on his knees, only standing when the rest of the Phantom Thieves rushed in after him.

There was a gasp as Takemi and Sae rose to their feet from the chairs along the counter, alongside Chihaya and so many other familiar faces. Ren's eyes traced over Mishima, Iwai, Kawakami, and Hifumi when they scrambled out of a booth, jaws to the floor.

But one person's weight held more than the others, and Ren slowly swiveled his head to stare at Sojiro standing behind the counter.

The man who bore the same shock as the rest, but his expression molded into warmth and relief the longer he stared at Ren, the lighting within the cafe sparkling off his watering eyes as he smiled with the utmost pride. He drank in Ren, Futaba, and the others, carefully setting down the mug he was cleaning.

Sojiro welcomed them home with a wide smirk.

“Ah, you’re back.”

AAAHHHH I can't believe we're finally here. At the end. Holy canoli. What a ride! Sojiro's words have been in my head for so long, and now they are finally on the screen! I'm crying and internally screaming because the journey has been so long and so filled with all sorts of emotions running over years. I'll make a more comprehensive end note and proper thank you at the end of the next chapter, the Epilogue. I'm still in shock that this is The End and pretty exhausted from holiday shenanigans :'D

EPILOGUE COMING JANUARY 6TH!

Our Light - Epilogue

Chapter 100: Our Light - Epilogue

(See the end of the chapter for notes.)

“You promised not to interfere.” Philemon smirked at Ryoto. “I didn’t think you were such a liar.”

They stood at the edge of a building within the falsely crafted world, which was seconds away from vanishing in a funerary shower of glorious prismatic colors. Starlight danced and fluttered around them like playful faeries.

“But I didn’t lie.” Ryoto kept his eyes to the distance, ignoring Philemon’s amusement, “Your Trickster defeated Yaldabaoth with his own power and merit. I simply stopped this mistake from turning into an endless cycle.”

“With a little help from the god-like beings in the other worlds.”

Ryoto sighed, “They’re just as tired of this situation as I am.” The landscapes in the distance were swallowed by the light, each world and their natural inhabitants separating permanently. Ryoto turned away from it.

“Where are you going?”

“Home.” Ryoto looked over his shoulder. The sharpness in Ryoto’s eyes were honed to a razor’s edge. An ancient and powerful aura emanated from his body, and the shadow at his feet revealed a form not entirely human, “And Philemon? If you or Nyarlethotep ever pull another farce like this, the others and I formed a pact to hunt you two down and put you out of your misery.”

Philemon wrinkled his nose, “Is that a threat?”

“No. How did your Trickster put it...? Ah, ‘it’s a promise of mutually assured destruction.’” Ryoto rolled his eyes when Philemon pouted at him, “I suggest you heed this warning with the utmost seriousness. If I ever see your face again, I won’t hold back.”

Ryoto walked into the curtain of starlight.

“So mean!”

Thankfully, the next step took him home before he could strike Philemon’s very punch-able face.

The dorms were empty when they returned, victorious against the God Of Control.

Well, ‘empty’ aside from Kazuya, Eri, and the Shinsou family. But a certain group of vigilantes were nowhere to be found. Risumi and Ayumu rushed to their son when he entered, smothering him in hugs, while Eri sat on Kazuya’s lap. Her face was buried in his chest as she hugged a familiar Lady Stubbs shaped plush that looked suspiciously hand-made.

“They’re not in here.” Cementoss stated once he checked all the rooms. “All of their belongings are cleaned out.”

“Yes... I’m getting similar reports across the grounds.” Nezu stated, his stare never wavering from Kazuya.

“I told you, they’re already gone.” Kazuya said as he ran a hand down Eri’s hair.

“But... the security system was never tampered with!” Power Loader cried. “We would know if they left or not!”

Kazuya smiled, “Are you so certain?”

“I...” Power Loader scratched his head, returning to his laptop with a stream of mutters.

Nezu sighed, “I promise you won’t be in trouble, but we must know what transpired. Where have they gone?”

“I can’t tell you where they went, because they didn’t tell me. However,” Kazuya reached into his pocket for a tiny box, hand wrapped with a shiny red bow, “They said to give you this when the time was right.”

“Oh?” Nezu took the box in his hand with a strange sparkle in his eyes.

Hitoshi, who stood next to his parents, checked his phone, “Uh...”

He rounded the couch to grab the television remote and turned it on. He flipped through a few channels before stopping on a news station, and every adult in the dorms froze at the headline.

BREAKING: Kamino Joker and Satanael Statue Stolen! Calling Card Left At The Scene! Is This The Return Of The Phantom Thieves!?

Aizawa buried his face in his hands as Demizu Mika was live on the air, standing in the square that held the statue. Only All Might’s visage stood there now.

“-ameras in the area were hacked and the culprits left no evidence. However, Joker’s Spotlight account has been renamed as the ‘Phantom Thieves Of Hearts’ and they left a message as their first post! It reads as thus: ‘To the people of the public, fear not! While Joker and Mona have officially retired, we’ll carry out our former Leader’s justice in his stead. It was Joker himself who requested that the statue be taken as our first heist, and any other attempts to replace it will be met with similar results!’”

Nezu tuned out the broadcast as he looked to the tiny present in his paws. He tugged off the neat ribbon and opened the box. The next thing they knew, an explosion of red glitter covered everything in a several meter radius around the rat. Startled yelps and swallowed swears followed as Nezu stood there like a sparkling statue, eerily silent.

Aizawa swallowed, “Nezu?”

With a shaking paw, Nezu reached into the box and pulled out a key chain. A red herring charm dangled from the end of it.

Nezu burst into an uncontrollable fit of laughter while the rest of the adults could do nothing but watch him descend into chaos.

“Do it again!”

“Kacchan! It’s hard to concentrate when you’re hitting me with my own notebook!”

“IT DOESN’T MATTER! You need to practice before you do something stupid like let it go out of control! How do you expect to save people or fight villains if you’re a liability on the field!?”

“Now, now.” Yagi held up his hands, “Young Midoriya, what did the vestiges say in your last dream with them?”

Bakugo huffed and sank back into the couch with a scowl.

“That... that I could take my time with their Quirks, since the threat of All For One is gone.” Midoriya looked at him, green eyes bright like emeralds glinting from warm sunlight, “I’ll master them! I won’t disappoint you!”

Yagi chuckled, “You’ve never disappointed me, my boy. Now, try again.”

Midoriya zeroed in on the magazine on the table, surrounded by their tea cups. He opened his palm, brow scrunching in concentration.

After a minute or so, a black tendril arose from his skin and shot out towards the table. Midoriya beamed and pulled his arm back for the tendril to return-

When the magazine, the teacups, and the teapot hurdled towards him.

He yelped as he ducked his head, the magazine harmlessly collided with the wall behind them and went splat on the floor, but the teacups and the pot shattered against it. Lukewarm tea oozed down the wall as Bakugo burst out in laughter.

"I-I'll clean it up!" Midoriya shot to his feet and gathered tissues and their paper towels, while Bakugo collapsed against the couch laughing so hard he clutched his stomach.

"Kacchan! You could at least help me?"

"No way!" Bakugo barked, "You made that mess, you clean it up!"

"Maybe we can call Nighteye and get his opinion on a better training method?" Yagi suggested, "I'll see if Gran Torino knows anything about the other vestiges... before you get access to their Quirks, too."

Bakugo scoffed. "The last thing we need is Deku breaking his bones again because he can't control his Quirks."

"Hey! I don't break them anymore!"

"No, you just break teapots and make a mess instead!"

Yagi smiled at their banter. This peace and tranquility born without the threat of All For One, without the weight of the world on his successor's shoulders... he knew who to thank for it.

And from the vibrant red top hat charm on Bakugo's phone, to the equally crimson stickers plastered all over Midoriya's notebooks, they knew it too.

None of them would ever forget.

“Why are you here?”

“Why wouldn’t we be?” Natsuo puffed out his chest and stared at the person tied to a chair on the other side of the glass wall, “You’re our brother!”

Shoto pursed his lips, his hand going numb from how hard Fuyumi gripped it. Coming into this room was a shock for his mother and siblings, but for himself and his father... at least they were somewhat prepared. Touya was tightly bound to a chair by a straitjacket, his crazed blue eyes pinning them with pure hatred as his dyed hair was nearly bleached white again. A thick glass pane separated them, and the walls on Touya’s side were charred and burnt black. The purple scarring on their brother’s face and limbs crept further up his body.

Shoto compared it to a slow flame burning away a sheet of paper, bit by bit.

Despite the horrific scenery, their mother kept her spine straight and her chin raised as she sat on the only chair in front of the glass panel, as delicate as a snowflake floating on a gentle breeze.

“You’re my son, Touya.” Rei stated, her soft gaze countering Touya’s, “No matter what you’ve done, that will never change.”

“Stop fooling around.” Touya leaned forward as much as he could in the chair, the restraints creaking, “I hate you. Don’t you understand that? I hate all of you!” Black smoke plumed from his chair, and within the dark cloud Touya grinned from ear to ear in a terrifying leer, “If I were free right now, I would set you all on fire and laugh while you were screaming and begging me for death!”

Tears streamed down Fuyumi’s cheeks, “Y-you can’t mean that! Touya-”

“STOP CALLING ME TOUYA!”

An alarm rang as Touya’s half of the room burst into blue flame.

“Touya!” Natsuo pounded his fist on the glass at the sudden deluge of water being poured on the other side, of the hiss of pain and the silence that came after the automated guns in the corner of his cell shot a tranquilizer.

The thickness of the stench made Shoto’s gut roil.

Streams of water trickled down the glass as the smoke in Touya cell slowly cleared, revealing their brother, unconscious and still wafting with sickly smelling smoke.

“Endeavor,” An emotionless drone of a voice came over the speakers, “It would be best to come back another day.”

Enji pulled himself from the wall behind them, “Yes. Let’s go.”

Fuyumi was the first to run out of the room. Rei rose from the chair in one fluid motion, and Natsuo finally tore his red-rimmed eyes away from Touya when she lay a hand on his shoulder. They walked out together. Shoto turned his back and walked out the door, his father following in his footsteps.

Shoto took a few steps into the stark white hall before stopping, feeling his father’s eyes on his back, “He won’t change.”

“You can’t be certain of that.”

Shoto whirled around to his father with hardened eyes, “Can’t I? Look at what happened in there!”

Enji opened his mouth, but closed it.

“What? Say it.”

“I changed.”

“... What?”

Enji gave his son a strange look, “I changed because a certain someone shattered my entire world view and helped me grow as a person. If someone like me can change for the better, then I know we can reach Touya, too.”

“But Joker went home.”

“Yes, but we don’t need Joker this time.” Enji placed a heavy hand on Shoto’s shoulder, “This is our family. It is our responsibility to get through to him, no matter how long it takes.”

Shoto huffed, “Are you insane?”

“Perhaps.” Enji’s expression shifted with a sad smile, “Or just very stubborn. I’m not going to give up on this. One way or another, we’ll reach him.”

Shoto stared at his father for a long while, “... If you want to keep trying with him, then I’m with you. I still don’t think we’ll get through to him any time soon, but I can’t have my old man do all the work himself.”

Enji grinned, “Thank you, Shoto.”

Shoto rolled his eyes and stepped away, cast one last look at the door, and walked down the hall to catch up with his mother and his siblings.

If Joker... if Ren imparted anything on himself or his father before he left, it was that accomplishing a goal took a lot of willpower and hard work. Even if it seemed impossible, the only reason they’d ever fail is if they gave up on Touya completely.

Ren started this path for their family, but they would be the ones to finish it.

Spring was in the air.

The snow and ice had long since melted, and the plants returned to life in an explosion of greenery and beautiful flowers. Taneo walked down such a street as cherry blossoms cascaded down like rain. Light chatter whispered on the breeze as he passed by a park filled to the brim with people viewing the pinks and whites of the trees.

Today marks the one-year anniversary of the USJ incident, and more importantly, the day a vigilante stepped into this world and changed it forever. The media had calmed down and swiftly moved on after the statue incident in Kamino, and the Phantom Thieves had been relatively quiet since.

People spoke of Joker's mysterious retirement less and less, and as time marched forward they didn't speak of it at all.

The world moved on.

It wasn't until Taneo reached his destination, a bus stop about a block away from the park, that he saw something that made him smile. Reignited that hope of maybe people wouldn't just forget about Ren entirely. Next to the bus stop's bench stood a pole littered with colorful stickers. All sorts of logos and brands he either didn't recognize or care for, but one stood out.

Worn and faded, the edges raw from weather, was a red 'Take Your Heart!' sticker. None of the others dared to cover it, and gave it space on the center stage. Almost as if they were afraid, or even reverent of it.

Taneo smiled.

His bus arrived and he boarded it. The other passengers barely gave him a passing glance as he sat near the back, staring out the window as it began rolling forward. Then, he nearly startled as a figure moved and sat next to him, leaving enough space to be polite.

“Um, excuse me.” The girl said staring down at her bag as she clutched, “Would you... um, would you happen to be the author of this?”

She reached into her bag and pulled out a familiar book - all black and red with distinct and vibrant wording.

“Yes, that would be me.”

“I knew it! If it’s not too much to ask for a signature?”

“Sure thing.” He flipped open the cover and signed his name, “I take it you’re a long time fan of Joker?”

“Yeah.” The girl smiled wistfully, “Actually, my grandparents are some of the people he saved from Silver Falcon.”

“You don’t say?”

“They have a small bakery in Musutafu. It’s not as popular as the Blue Lotus, but they get by really well.” She said after he handed back the book, “If you’re ever in town and want to visit, I’ll tell them to give you a good discount!”

“Will do.”

She smiled at him before she returned to her seat next to a small group of girls, all whispering excitedly as she showed them his signature.

It settled him.

Yeah, perhaps the current media moved on, but the sticker and his book served as the true marks of a world that will never forget.

“Orange doesn’t suit you, Kunikazu.”

The other man glared from across the table, “What is this about, Ryoto? Come to gloat about your position as the new HPSC President?”

“I’m not so petty as that.” Ryoto interlaced his gloved fingers.

“Then what? The case is going your way, so I don’t get what you could possibly be here for.”

“Hmm, I suppose you could say I’m here to see you witness Joker’s kindness first hand. Perhaps it’ll give you a fresh perspective over your actions.”

The cuffs around Kunikazu’s wrist jangled as he slammed his fists on the table, “That diabolical brat! So that’s what this is? Rubbing salt in the wound? I’m sure he’s still gallivanting around Japan, making a mess of things.”

Ryoto sighed, “It’s hard to get news here, I understand. Joker’s gone.”

“Gone? Since when?”

“Seven months ago, on Christmas. Officially retired back to his home. Nobody’s heard a word from him since, which I assure you means that everything is as it should be.”

Kunikazu simply... stared, eyes wide.

Ryoto stood, “My time grows short, but I’ll leave you with someone who’s been wanting to talk to you for a while.”

“Who...?”

Ryoto opened the door behind him, revealing an older woman who’s smile was so soft.

Kunikazu turned bone-white, “Mother? H-How...?”

She walked in and sat where Ryoto did moments before, reaching out to grasp her son's hand. Around her wrist was a set of unique rosary, one Ryoto knew was that gift Joker left when they visited that hospital. A treasure from Amaterasu herself.

"I had a dream of a kind boy, right before I woke up." Her eyes shone with tears, "And that boy took my hand and told me that everything would be alright."

Ryoto walked out before he heard Kunikazu's shaky reply. He meandered down the hallway and rejoined Commissioner Tsukauchi, along with Officer Sansa and Chief Tsuragamae.

"I'm still not sure this is a good idea." Sansa said.

"Why not?" Tsukauchi asked.

"I mean isn't dropping this on Kunikazu out of the blue a bit... too much? I hope it won't affect the case overall."

"Everyone deserves closure." Ryoto stated as he clasped his hands behind his back, "Even if that someone is a person like Kunikazu."

"I agree." Tsuragamae crossed his arms, "In the end, if it makes him more open to serving his time and repenting for his wrongdoings, instead of resisting them, then all the better."

"And we know who to thank for this." Sansa muttered under his breath.

Tsukauchi frowned, his hand idly going to his sheathed weapon; a gun in the makings of sterling silver, and decorated with angel wings.

Ryoto sensed nothing from it anymore. The same as he sensed from Amaterasu's rosaries. Over the past few months, the magics of these items slowly withered away until they became nothing more than normal items, paperweights without such divine powers. But for these individuals they meant so much more than that, and kept them still for their practical uses.

At that moment, Tsukauchi's phone buzzed.

Sansa smirked as the man jumped and raced to answer the text, "When are you going to pick out a ring? I want to be there to help you choose!"

Tsukauchi stammered, "What? It's still far too early to think about things like that!"

"Is it?" Sansa narrowed his eyes, "I've seen you two together. You're practically the perfect fit for each other."

Ryoto cleared his throat, "I'll leave you gentlemen to it, then. Do give me an update when you can?"

"Will do, sir." Tsuragamae stated.

Ryoto turned his heel and left.

Yes, this world is as it should be.

Dearest Eri,

We sincerely hope this letter reaches you well, and that you enjoy the gifts in this package. A dress from the finest of French boutiques, high end chocolate from Germany, and a silver necklace from Italy that I'm sure will match your hair and bring out your eyes. We were going to send along a fine bottle of apple cider as well, but Spinner drank all of it.

La Brava and Lady Stubbs were swift to punish him for it, I promise.

As you've no doubt seen Gentle Criminal's latest video, we've taken down a famous cellist who used her musical Quirk to hypnotize her patrons into doing her bidding, leaving an entire host of incidents where the previous 'criminals' were all proven to be innocent because they were under her malicious spell. Her illegally acquired treasure hoard has been confiscated by the police, but her cello will make a fine addition to our collection. Another prize to be guarded over by the Joker and Satanael statue in our hideout!

While the trail we leave will always be cold to investigators and heroes alike, it seems the majority of Europe has grown wise to us since our latest target, and thus we'll move on.

Who knows where we'll be by the time our next letter reaches you?

Sincerely, Mr. Compress, La Brava, Gentle Criminal, and Spinner.

(And one very large paw print from Lady Stubbs.)

P.S. And Nezu, because we know everything we send goes through intense security and you read these letters personally, we've gifted you a lavish selection of cheeses. One is a large wheel of Parmigiano Reggiano, which was one of the most difficult and ridiculous heists we've ever been on for a dairy product.

No glitter this time, promise! Instead, there's a jar of your favorite pickled herring to compliment the cheese!

Enjoy :)

White walls, white floors.

Sterile and blank.

Sounds so muffled it was like there wasn't any noise at all, only leaving the maddening sound of your own heartbeat thumping in your ears. But the bang of the large steel door was akin to standing next to a crack of thunder. The clack of his own footsteps bounced off the too-clean walls as he was allowed through, the door slamming behind him struck through his chest.

The figure in the lone underground cell barely moved, a simple raise of his head so that a blood red eye peeked through the curtain of his long hair.

“Who the hell are you?” The tired, dry voice rasped.

Shirakumo stared at his former charge, his bedraggled appearance and stained, worn out clothes barely fit for a human. Body so thin it was as if he stared at a living skeleton.

“Let me guess, the newest psychiatrist All Might hired? You might as well just turn around and leave now. It’ll save us both the wasted effort.”

Shirakumo shook his head and stepped up to the glass wall, “No, it wasn’t All Might. Actually, I’m the one who begged him to let me see you. Eraser and Mic weren’t happy either, but this wasn’t their choice to make. ”

The crimson eye narrowed sharply, “Who are you? I won’t ask again.”

Shirakumo smiled. He sat cross legged so he was level with the dishevelled person huddling in the corner, knees touching the glass, as he raised his hand, “It has been some time, young Shigaraki Tomura.” The smallest wisp of black trickled from Shirakumo’s fingers, enough to stain the endless white for but a moment.

Shigaraki startled, both eyes visible as they were blown wide. “... Kurogiri?”

“In some form... yes, I suppose a part of me is still Kurogiri, and always will be.” He idly watched the black mist fade away, “But another part is who I was before being turned into him. My name, my real name, is Shirakumo Oboro.”

“How? How are you...?”

Shirakumo’s smile tightened, “It was Joker that healed me.”

Shigaraki went still, and anyone else could mistake him for a corpse, if not for his stuttered breathing.

“I’ve spent the last year relearning how to live again, retraining my Quirk. Trying to blend Kurogiri’s memories with who I was before to make someone new, in a sense. Living at U.A. when the time was right so I could learn to be a hero.”

“Why are you here then?”

“Because when I learned what happened to you...” Shirakumo frowned, “I couldn’t just ignore it.”

Shigaraki did something that made Shirakumo’s heart hurt . He didn’t stand up and walk over to the glass. No, he crawled. A shuffling body that used his minimal strength to drag himself across the floor. Shigaraki more or less collapsed against his side of the glass with a weary sigh, and Shirakumo used every ounce of his resolve not to let bitterness or burning rage take over his heart.

He could whisk himself and Shigaraki away; right here, right now. Disappear off the face of the earth with his newfound powers. But that wouldn’t allow Shigaraki to get the real help he needed, an extended hand offered by Ryukyu and Gang Orca themselves. And... he couldn’t do that to Eraser and Mic again.

He promised.

“Why?”

Shirakumo blinked, “Why what?”

“Why bother with someone like me? You got your life back, and when you were Kurogiri you were treated like dirt... so why?”

“Everyone deserves a second chance.” Shirakumo pressed a hand to the glass, “And as long as I’m around, you’ll never be alone. I might not be fully Kurogiri anymore, but that doesn’t mean I don’t still care about you.”

Shigaraki stared at him again, long and hard, as if looking for a lie.

Shirakumo beamed at him, “So? What do you say? Do you want the chance to get out of here?”

Shigaraki looked at Shirakumo’s hand, then back to his eyes. The light flickered within his gaze, a bare tiny ember, as he raised his hand. He pressed his palm to it, their hands separated by the glass.

Shirakumo’s grin was like seeing the sun rise for the first time after a long, dark night.

“On second thought, maybe this isn’t the best idea.”

Aizawa raised a brow at Kazuya as he leaned against the car U.A. lent to them, “You’re backing out now after all the trouble we went through to get here?”

Kazuya opened his mouth, then closed it. He stared at the gate to a small dwelling, so familiar the memories of it often flitted through his mind, more specifically at his earliest memories. Buried under several lifetimes, but still present.

A small hand grabbed his and gave it a squeeze, “I’ll go with you if you need me!”

Eri had grown so much, now being about as tall as his elbow. Her silver hair was done up in elegant braids(thanks to Aizawa’s efforts), and she wore one of the many dresses Mr. Compress and the others sent to her recently. Even from so far away they spoiled her, but he couldn’t blame them. The horn on her head was more prominent than ever, but she'd grown to control her powers so well she didn't need a Quirk Suppressant anymore.

His own bracelet glimmered in the afternoon sunlight as he patted her head, "I would appreciate it."

Her spine straightened as she looked to the gate with determination. The grip on his hand tightened as she pulled him forward.

"Take as long as you need." Aizawa stated, "I'll wait here."

Kazuya nodded as Eri opened the gate and marched them through the traditional styled path to the front door. His mouth went dry, and he knew Eri could feel his hands growing shaky and sweaty with each step closer.

She valiantly gave the front door a solid knock, and they waited in silence.

"Coming!"

Kazuya's heart pounded at the soft voice he'd not heard in ages.

The front door slid open, and a slender woman with pale hair appeared. His mother's face gained many wrinkles since he'd last saw her so many years ago, and she just looked... tired. Their eyes met. Her face fell in shock and she dropped a small load of laundry she'd carried.

Eri looked back and forth as the mother and son seemed frozen.

"Dear, are you alright? I heard a noise." Another voice within the house grew closer, and a second figure appeared behind. His father paused, expression breaking as if he'd been punched. "Kazuya ?"

He'd never heard his father's voice quake before.

Kazuya swallowed thickly, "I... I can come back another time-"

“No!” His mother reached for him, her hands shaking as she stepped forward, “Is it... it’s really you... This isn’t just another nightmare?”

Kazuya stilled as his mother released a cry and wrapped her arms around him, the tears falling as she buried her face in his chest. His father snapped out of it and seconds later two pairs of arms encased him. The dam finally broke as he cried too, and the family of three slowly sank to the floor from the sheer relief.

After several minutes, his mother pulled herself together and pulled back, hands still on his shoulder, “How are you here? Are you in any danger? The hospital-”

Kazuya held up a hand, “There was a case against the hospital for mistreating patients, and I’ve been discharged. I’m a teacher at U.A. now-”

“You teach at U.A.!? ” His father blurted, eyes wide, then his gaze fell on Eri, “And who’s this?”

His mother rapidly looked back and forth between he and Eri, “KAZUYA!” She chopped his head as she burst into happy tears again, “Did I have a precious grandbaby all this time and you could never so much as write to tell us!?”

Kazuya’s ears burned, “I-it’s not like that-”

Eri giggled, and the sound made both his parents light up like Christmas lights.

“You better explain, mister!” His mother stood, pulling up himself and his father with renewed strength, “I-I’m going to make all of your favorites! A-and then we can... we can all sit down and you can tell us all about these last years!”

“Can I help?” Eri asked softly.

His mother's eyes gained another layer of tears as she held out her hand, "Of course, sweetie! I would love to get to know my precious grandbaby!"

"It's not like-" Kazuya tried again, but Eri and his mother already disappeared down the hallway. He looked at his father and saw nothing but pride glimmering in his eyes.

His father put a firm hand on his shoulder, "Welcome home, son."

Kazuya's heart swelled with warmth.

He didn't know what to expect. To beg for forgiveness over stealing their money and disappearing? For worrying them? To be scorned and kicked off the property, perhaps.

But not this...

And it was all thanks to a certain kid and his talking feline that he'd eventually worked up the courage to change his life for the better, to see his parents again.

Kazuya smiled, "It's good to be home."

"This is Best Jeanist, almost in position with my interns."

"Copy that, Jeanist." Hawks stated as he crouched over the edge of a building, staring down at a large warehouse, "My team has eyes on the target building."

"Hey, we're almost ready, too!" Miruko cackled, "Say, Mr. Number One Hero, want to make a bet?"

"Is this really the time?" Iida Tensei stated in exasperation over the comms.

"I agree with my brother!" Hawks imagined the younger Ingenium chopping his arm rapidly, "Shouldn't we just focus on the mission?"

“Aw, c’mon! It adds a little fun! And... the winner team gets taken out to dinner! Loser team pays!”

Best Jeanist gave a long sigh.

“Oh, you’re on.” Hawks stood, his hand reaching for the flaming sword at his back. It might not be the legendary divine weapon anymore, what with losing its powers alongside the ring on his finger, but it still worked as a sword and made a striking image. “What’s the bet?”

“Who can take these losers down the fastest!”

“Welp, I hope you all brought your wallets.”

Miruko cackled.

“I might regret this, but Best Jeanist and his team are in position.”
Iida Tensei said reluctantly, “We have the green light to engage.”

“Alright! Dynamight, Ingenium, Red Riot! Don’t you dare disappoint me!”

“I’LL KICK YOUR ASS!” Dynamight screamed over the comms, and the first explosion of the battle kicked off.

“Well, you heard him.” Hawks grinned at his team of third year interns, “Deku, Creati, Tsukuyomi, let’s get to it!”

“Yes, sir!”

The four of them descended onto the villains’ lair.

Tsukuyomi used Dark Shadow as wings to fly down alongside him, Creati sprung a parachute from her back, and Deku...

Well, it was a mystery to Hawks.

Deku used snapping black tendrils to swing down, and during their training it was as if the boy... floated, at times. Paired with his green lightning, and outstanding speed and strength, Hawks wondered if Deku would be the one to replace him down the line.

For now, they had villains to apprehend and hostages to rescue.

It wasn't a mystery why this mission felt nostalgic.

He knew Joker would be proud of them.

"-I wish you could've seen Bakugo's face when they lost the bet. It was priceless."

Her mother chuckled.

Even separated by glass and having to talk through rudimentary phones, it was nice to hear.

"How have you been?" Momo asked softly.

"Well enough." She frowned, "Have you spoken to your father lately?"

"No, he hasn't... he refuses to see me. I've sent him letters as well, but he's not replied to a single one."

"... I see." Her mother looked down, "You graduate in a month or two, yes?"

"Yeah." Momo tried a warm smile to lift her mother's spirits, "I'll be a full fledged hero soon, and Hawks offered to officially sponsor Hatsume and I until our collaboration can get off the ground. Mei is certainly excited, and Ichinose's workshop is buzzing with more of her creations than I've ever seen."

A sad smile graced her mother's lips, "Momo, I'm proud of you."

“What?”

“No matter what’s happened, I’m proud. You can do nothing but think in a place like this, and I’ve been reflecting on what your father and I did, how wrong it was.” She tucked a lock of dark hair behind her ears, “We simply didn’t want to raise you in squalor, but that didn’t make our actions any better.”

“Mother...”

The woman finally smiled, and it reached her eyes, “So you go out there and live your life to the fullest, alright?”

“Yes, I will!”

Their time ran short soon after, and Momo walked out of the correctional facility with her head held high. She was halfway to the train station when her phone went off.

[Shoto]

Are you done visiting your mother?

[Momo]

Yes, I left not too long ago.

How about you with your father?

[Shoto]

He’s as insufferable as ever, but we got the paperwork finished today. Natsuo and I escaped before he could drag us into another ‘father and sons bonding session’.

Want to meet up for dinner?

It's my turn to pay.

[Momo]

How about that one soba shop we found last time?

[Shoto]

I'll meet you there.

Momo placed her phone in her bag, her fingers brushing over her grandfather's pocket watch.

She smiled fondly at it before she zipped her bag shut and continued on her way.

"Shiggy, just a little higher!"

"I told you to stop calling me that."

"Just listen to her! She knows what she's doing! No she doesn't !"

"Jin! Now your side is too high!"

"Sorry! Not sorry! "

Himiko facepalmed.

Ryukyu nudged her with a sly smirk, "It looks great."

"Thank you." Himiko said as the boys finally placed the 'Welcome!' banner on the wall, "We spent all night on it!"

"No, you spent all night keeping us up while you did everything yourself." Shigaraki grumbled, "I just wanted to sleep."

She stuck her tongue out at him, receiving rolled eyes in return.

Himiko never expected Shigaraki of all people to join the program, but he's come so far. Despite their... rather intense disagreements years ago, she doesn't hate him, nor he towards them anymore. She was so proud. Of all of them, really.

Shigaraki's complexion and dried skin improved the first week after he was fished out of the worst cell in Tartarus, and he'd returned to a healthy weight after a solid month of a careful diet. She'd always wondered if his dry skin was due to his quirk, and without it he seemed to flourish. He kept his hair long and tied it back.

Jin didn't need his mask anymore either, though he still contradicted himself.

As for her, well...

Ryukyu and Gang Orca took Himiko under their wing after graduating from this program. Taught her everything she knew about how to run it so she could be a representative for the people who came here. To stand up for the ones who were trampled on over something they were born with. The ones who had to stoop to villainy just to survive an unfair world. To prove to the public that this program works .

Because it did. So many former 'villains' had been brought here and were able to live better lives because of it. Who knew that peoples' lives could improve with just a little bit of strength and support from others?

Their next step was including animals. Dogs. Cats. Perhaps lizards or birds. Creatures for the patients to take care of and bond with to help in their recovery.

"They're here." Ryukyu said after her phone pinged, eyes softening.

Himiko clapped, "Everyone, in your places!"

The nurses scrambled. Shigaraki nearly tripped and fell from the ladder if it wasn't for Jin grabbing his arm and hauling them both down to the ground. Himiko straightened her spine while standing next to Ryukyu, eyes set towards the pair of big double doors.

They opened and streams of sunlight shown through. A nurse pushed in a wheelchair with a familiar form, while Gang Orca's powerful steps thundered beside him.

Himiko's heart turned to ice at the state of their newest addition.

Todoroki Touya, former villain name Dabi. At least, what was left of him. She'd not seen him since the Overhaul Raid years ago. His snow white hair was limp and long, and bandages covered most of his thin body like a mummy.

She felt Ryukyu stiffen beside her, the same reaction even after so many times of pulling former villains from the worst of Tartarus.

Himiko took a deep breath and let it out. Her lone footsteps were loud as she walked to Touya's wheelchair and knelt down in front of him. He lifted his head, icy blue eyes dull and nearly broken, but there was a spark of recognition there.

"Welcome." Himiko stated softly, smiling as she held up her hand, "Let's get you settled in, okay?"

Touya stared at her a long moment, internally debating if he was in a dream or not. Then he gazed around the room, to Shigaraki, Jin, the nurses, other patients who bore understanding smiles, and finally the big 'Welcome!' sign.

Touya offered her a weak grunt, but his hand reached for hers.

Her smile widened as the rough texture of the bandages caressed her own fingers.

This one would take a lot of work, she thought, but her offering her hand, and him accepting the help was a solid first step towards a brighter future.

She'd learned from Joker that even the smallest step forward could change a life forever, and she'd be that beacon of Hope for others, too.

The jingle of the door swinging open made Magne sigh.

"Can't you read the sign?" She said without turning her back, the mug in her hands all but clean as she set it down with a hard thunk, "We're closed."

The person was quiet for a moment, the only sound was of their rustling clothes as they shifted, "I can't believe you actually kept this bar open."

She whirled around at the familiar voice, gaping at the figure standing at the door, "Atsuhiro ? Is that really you?"

Atsuhiro smirked as he sauntered to the counter and sat down at a stool, "As one of our dearest companions used to say... 'The one and only.'"

"When did you guys get back? Why are you..."

Atsuhiro's smirk fell, "We decided to return home for a bit after a particularly nasty encounter with heroes in the Americas." He waved his gloved hand, "Turns out they can get quite tense and angry when it's revealed that one of their most treasured 'heroes' isn't the paragon of justice behind closed doors. They acted like his crimes were our fault simply because we revealed the truth!"

Magne pursed her lips.

Atsuhiro cleared his throat and waved his hand again, as if clearing the air, "But that's not important. I..." He sighed and scratched the back of his head, "I'll be honest. One of my biggest regrets was how our last interaction ended. In the heat the moment, it was rather explosive."

"And?"

"And I'm hoping... maybe, we could rekindle what was lost?"

Silence drenched the bar.

After an entire minute of stillness, Atsuhiro chuckle dryly, "If not, I understand. Simply say the word and I'll never bother you again-"

"Atsuhiro." Magne chuckled as she turned around, knelt down, and reached into a hidden cupboard close to the ground. Atsuhiro leaned over to watch as she pulled out a particularly expensive brand of whisky, covered in a layer dust. "I bought this after that day, just in case you ever came back. We were both very stupid back then, huh?"

"The curse of being brash and young."

It was Magne's turn to chuckle as she set the bottle on the counter and grabbed two shot glasses, "'Brash and young'? I suppose that gray hair means you've gotten old?"

"Gray hair!?" Atushiro's hands feathered through his scalp, "Where!? I didn't have a gray hair last time I checked! I- oh that is just mean, Magne! If anything, Gentle Criminal is the one who has naturally white hair, but we're not really that old yet!"

Magne smiled as she poured the amber liquid into their glasses, "Are they coming along, then?"

Atsuhiro, still playfully glowering, lifted his glass, "After a while, yes, if everything goes smoothly here. They had their own business to check on first.”

“Well, while we wait, you can share all of the adventures and behind the scenes stories that aren’t blasted on the news or buried on Spotlight?”

“I’d love to.”

Atsuhiro raised his glass towards Magne. Their glasses clinked as they downed their first drink, with many more to come.

Hitoshi sighed in relief when the back door closed behind him.

He slipped off his boots and hung his capture weapon on the hook beside the door, and his father popped his head through the kitchen door by the time he undid the clasps for his mask.

Hitoshi didn’t even fight the tight hug from his father.

“Long week?” Ayumu stepped back with both hands on his son’s shoulders, “They shared a bit of what happened on the news.”

Hitoshi huffed as he pulled his Persona Chords off, smirking at the ridiculous ‘Kiss the cook’ apron his father wore. Though that softened at the colorful and childish drawings scribbled on it. It was late, so the Blue Lotus was closed and his father must’ve just finished cleaning the kitchen.

“Yeah. The raid is over, so I’ll be taking my normal shifts for a bit. At least I’ll be home every morning. Where are the twins? They usually come running the moment I get home.”

“In the back with Granny Haru. Go see them before dinner is finished.”

“Uh, about that...”

His father raised a brow.

“Off the record, I met up with some familiar faces during work and invited them over for dinner. Is that okay?”

“Of course.” Ayumu’s eyes sparkled, “About time they visit. I’ll let your mother know.”

“Thanks.”

Ayumu passed him and shot up the stairs to their apartment.

Hitoshi smiled as he made his way through the Blue Lotus kitchen. It was everything his parents ever wanted. Top of the line equipment and other tools galore, with enough space for an entire team of cooks to comfortably move about. The new hires certainly loved it as much as his parents did.

He checked the front to make sure nobody else was there. Hitoshi eyed the refined brick walls and warm lighting sprinkled in by low hanging lamps, the front counter and the empty glass showcase that would hold all sorts of treats. Long leather booths and tables took up most of the space, far larger and more in number than they’d ever had before. The earthy scent and the warm, safe lighting was the perfect place to settled down and read.

A lot of their customers complimented the full bookshelves which anyone could take from, as long as they returned the book before they left. It was a common denial that most of their more expensive books or international collections came from packages signed by the international Phantom Thieves. Nope.

And of course, the small hints of red scattered about was a permanent reminder of who got them there. Stickers on individual menus, bookmarks, a mask pin hanging in the window, the flaming top hat and mask on the chalkboard sign over the cash register.

With a smile, Hitoshi retreated from the front and traipsed through the kitchen. One of the newest additions to their home was a small backyard. Fenced in and safe, with plenty of Granny Haru’s plants to paint the entire place green. A pleasant coolness replaced the summer heat as the sun set, and Hitoshi walked over the stone path that led to a small pond.

Thanks to a few favors he'd called in, he'd convinced a few people with the right quirks to grow real blue lotuses right in their back yard. Fireflies floated around the garden like fairies, painting the blue flowers in pleasant light, while crickets sang their nightly songs.

"Toshi-nii-chan!!"

Two voices screamed before small footsteps raced over the ground, and Hitoshi felt the breath knocked out of them as the twins collided with him with the united force of their tiny bodies.

Hitoshi laughed as he patted their purple hair, "Miss me much?"

"Of course we did!" One of the twins looks up at him, puffing her cheeks, "We always miss you."

The other nodded frantically as she pulled on his shirt. "You were gone forever this time!"

They were both identical twins. They'd inherited their mother's eyes and their father's hair color, and Hitoshi liked to imply that they copied his streak of not taking anyone's bullshit. But there was one thing that set them apart from himself or their parents. In their gravity defying purple hair was a streak of lilac so pale it was a few shades away from being stark white.

It served as a mystery to him and his father, but his mother always patted that spot on their heads with a fond look in her eyes. As if she knew something they didn't. She never said anything about it, so Hitoshi agreed with his father it was a mystery best left unresolved.

"Did you kick any villain butt while you were gone?"

"Yeah, yeah! Tell us!"

“I could.” Hitoshi sagely nodded, “But then you’d be so scared you wouldn’t go to sleep tonight.”

“But Hitoshi-nii-chan!”

“We won’t be scared this time, honest!”

“Yeah! Eri-nee-chan taught us how to be brave, so tell us!”

“Pleeeeeeease?”

Hitoshi winced at their honest and innocent little eyes. He wouldn’t tell them that his latest raid with other heroes uncovered a nasty underground black market with live people as their stock.

“Akira, Ren, stop pestering your brother.” Haru-san sat on a bamboo chair beside the pond, cane in hand as she pulled herself to her feet. As always, she had the warmest smile plastered on her face, “Welcome home, deary.”

“Thanks.” He looked down at his baby sisters as they sank in disappointment, “Dinner should be ready soon, so why don’t we all head upstairs? There might be a surprise later, too.”

“Kay!”

Akira took Ren’s hand, and the twins raced inside together.

Haru chuckled as he offered his arm to guide her inside, “They were helping me count fireflies while you were gone.”

“Oh?”

“They’ve gotten so big already. It won’t be much longer before they’re taller than me.”

Hitoshi smirked when they reached the stairs to the apartment, “We’ll really be in trouble then.” He frowned as he helped her up one step at a time, “My next paycheck I swear I’m getting you one of those moveable chairs you stick to the wall.”

“Oh, there’s no need for that.” Haru patted his arm, her hand soft and wrinkled with age, “Just you and your parents taking me in when I could no longer care for myself is enough.”

“Haru-san, the twins call you their grandmother for a reason.” Hitoshi stated, “You’re part of our family now, so I’ll do anything I can to make your life easier.”

“Such a gentleman.” The twinkles reappeared in her eyes as they reached the top.

He opened the door and let her walk in first before he followed. A whole two steps in his own home and he was assaulted by a puff of fur jumping on his face.

“Merp!”

“AHFSN!” He pulled Lady Stubbs off of his face and glared at her when she purred, then scanned the rest of the apartment. “What the…”

Like downstairs, a mixture of brick walls and deep hardwood floors provided no small amount of comfort and safety. The kitchen had many of the same appliances as the downstairs one, though the furniture in their living room was longer, their couch curved like a crescent moon to hold many people.

“I wasn’t expecting you guys for at least another hour.” Hitoshi stated as he tucked Lady Stubbs under his arm. “Where did you guys come in anyway?”

Manami grinned as she sat at the couch with a cup of tea in hand, “Your bedroom window, naturally.”

Hitoshi balked as Shuichi cackled, the twins sitting on his shoulders, "No regrets!"

"I certainly have regrets." Hitoshi muttered.

"Now don't be like that." Tobita said from the open kitchen, standing in front of a steaming pot, "We decided to come early to help out with dinner."

"Exactly!" Atsuhiro held up a finger, "Unexpected guests should help out as much as possible!"

Manami stared at Atsuhiro as he lounged on the couch, "Really? You haven't helped with anything!"

"Atsuhiro, if you don't mind helping with the dishes?" Risumi asked with a stern smile. "I would like to give my son a hug after not seeing him for a week."

Atsuhiro jumped up from the couch, "Uh, r-right away, miss Shinsou!"

"I told you before to call me Risumi."

"Right..."

She handed him the dishtowel and then walked to Hitoshi. She lay a hand on Hitoshi's cheek before wrapping her arms around him, "Welcome back, Hitoshi."

"Thanks." He sank into her embrace, "When will dinner be ready?"

"Soon." She stepped back and gestured towards the couch, "Haru-san, Hitoshi, why don't you sit down?"

Risumi closed the door as Hitoshi helped Haru into sitting comfortably.

"Uncle Shuichi," Ren gently tugged at Shuichi's hair, "Can you tell us a story?"

“Yeah! One with Joker-nii-chan?”

“Of course!” Shuichi beamed, “I got plenty!”

Laughter. Warmth. Comfort. Safety.

... Family.

Hitoshi felt something pleasant curl around his heart as the scent of curry and coffee permeated their apartment soon after.

His brother would be so proud.

Ren sneezed.

Sojiro gave him a stern look, “Are you sure you can look after the store for a few minutes?”

“Boss, I’ll be fine.” Ren chuckled as Sojiro kept staring at him, as if Ren’d disappear as soon as Sojiro turned his back, “And I won’t go anywhere. Today, at least.”

Sojiro ran a hand over his head, his eyes flashing with restrained sadness, “Right. You’re leaving tomorrow.”

Ren pursed his lips.

They had a huge party when they’d first returned on Christmas day, but when it died down Sae approached him with an ultimatum. Turn himself in, add his testimony so they could nail Shido with the fullest force of the law.

He’d spent weeks in juvenile hall. It wasn’t bad, really. Iwai used his connections to make sure Ren was safe and even comfortable during his time there, while everyone else worked to gain public favor to reverse his original charges. Makoto and the other Phantom Thieves tracking down the woman from the initial incident was the fatal stroke that turned the tide in his favor.

“I won’t be gone forever, but going home for a while is the best option.” Ren said as he traced the wooden counter with a finger, “I’m going to confront my parents on everything they did to me. If they don’t accept me for who I am, fine. I’ll finish school there and move back to Tokyo permanently. I’ll be back before you know it, Boss.”

Sojiro gave off a long sigh, “When did you grow up so quick? You’ve never mentioned your parents before now.”

Ren smirked, “Spending over half a year in a superhero world really gives you new perspectives on certain things.”

“Right...” Sojiro huffed as he turned away, “Alternate world craziness. I’m too old for that.”

Sojiro cracked a wry smile as he retrieved his hat and coat, giving Ren another long glance before he left.

Ren was left to his own devices in an empty cafe. The regulars have come and gone, so Ren busied himself by washing the remaining dishes in the sink. A few more minutes pass before the bell over the door jingled.

He dried his hands and turned around, but stopped in his tracks at the person sitting on a booth right in front of him. Ren heard the door open, but there had been no footsteps. This stranger wore a white suit and tied his hair up in a ponytail. The small curve of his lips was the only thing visible under the butterfly mask, in a frighteningly familiar shade of velvety blue.

A strange tingle trickled through the air and sent goosebumps down Ren’s arms. This must be... Yes, there was no doubt.

Still, he smiled and stepped to the counter, “What can I get you?”

The man only turned his gaze to the menu for a few moments before pinning Ren with his stare again, “I’ll have the Grumpy Cat Blend.”

Ren nodded and got to work. The man's eyes watched Ren's every move, studying it with a deep intensity that was steadily getting harder to ignore. Ren focused on preparing the coffee beans, the familiar aroma bringing forth memories of another Hierophant, as the man's gaze burned into the side of his head.

Ren held in a sigh of relief as the coffee was poured and he set the cup in front of the only customer in the place. That piercing stare lifted as he took the steaming mug and sipped gingerly.

"Hmmm, this is good. I've never drank coffee much, but this sets it at a whole new level."

Ren smirked, "I'm glad you like it... Philemon."

He froze, mug halfway up for a second sip, but his lips burst into a happy grin, "You know who I am!"

Ren gave him a deadpanned stare, "It's not hard to figure out. Nobody else has ever come in here dressed like that, and doesn't give off, well..." Ren waved his hand around.

"Quite." Philemon gave his second sip and set the cup down.

"Why did you come here? If you're looking to start something after all the trouble I went through with Yaldabaoth..."

"Nothing of the sort! I just wanted to congratulate you in person, is all. The hardest game I've ever set up, and you've performed marvelously. You're only the second Wildcard to gain the Universe Arcana too, on top of that."

Ren barely kept his scowl in check, and it was his turn to give Philemon a long, hardened stare.

Philemon waved his hand, finishing off the rest of the coffee, "Alright, I can take a hint." He set the cup down and stood, "Thank you for the coffee."

“You’re welcome.” Ren shifted his weight as Philemon turned, “There is one more thing before you go.”

Philemon looked at Ren in time to receive a swift punch to the jaw. The man cried out as he tumbled to the floor on his ass, the stool toppling over with such a loud clamor that four tiny paws raced down the stairs at the commotion.

Morgana stood in the hallway, gaping at the scene.

“Truth suggested I did that if you ever came around.” Ren stated in the thick silence that followed, “And I happened to agree with him.”

Philemon burst into laughter. As bright and clear as a bell, even as he lay a hand over his jaw and the small crack at the bottom of his butterfly mask.

“What the-” Morgana looked back and forth between Philemon and Ren, “Who the heck is this guy, Ren!?”

“Don’t worry your little head about it, Magician.” Philemon said as he pulled himself to his feet, leaving Morgana balking, “I was just taking my leave. Second Wildcard to reach the Universe Arcana, and the second to also punch me in the face.” Philemon chuckled again as he turned towards the door, “Live a good and long life, Trickster.”

With that, Philemon left.

Morgana gaped at Ren as he went around the counter and righted the stool. “It’s best not to ask questions, Mona.”

Morgana blinked rapidly, “I-if you say so.”

Ren plucked the cup from the counter just as Boss returned.

“Oh, we had a customer?” Sojiro asked as he hung up his hat.

“Yeah, but I took care of it. Everything is fine.”

And for once...

Everything was fine.

Well, that's that! The end! Holy canoli I never thought we'd see the day where this absolute monster of a story is finally finished.

Special thanks goes to the beta-readers of this story, the true heroes behind the scenes: Lofti Lofi, Mystik_Owl, and Ghostdoru. Honestly, without their constant support and reassurances(especially on my bad health days) this story probably would've stalled for a while in the mid chapter 30s or so.

Another round of special thanks especially goes to Sabronda and all of the merch artists! You know who you are <3

And of course we can't leave out the wonderful readers! Yes, you. Reading this right now. Everyone who took a chance with this story and stuck with it through thick and thin, through all the loop de loops and crazy zig-zags and everything in between! Without you and all of the wonderful comments I've received through this story, I never would've found my true worth as a writer. I'm improved my leaps and bounds thanks to this story and all of you, and there simply aren't enough words to show proper appreciation for everyone that stuck through to the end <3

This isn't the last you'll see of me, either. After a good long break the plan is to try and finish Innocence, Malice, & Nihilism, while working on the other Thieves' stories and the Nier Automata AU. Past those are more fic ideas, such as a Bleach/Okami fic that's been dancing through my brain or a darker vigilante style Deku story... or maybe I'll return to some original books that have been sitting in a drive for years and years and fix those up with everything I've learned from this fic alone.

There isn't much else to say, but I'll leave you all on these parting words...

HEE HO!!
